THE PRIESTS IN MEXICO. - The Emperor of Mexico has already shown that he is not by any means a bigoted Roman Catholic, but that in the matter of religion he has liberal and enlightened views. Instead of the religious intolerance lately enjoined by the Pope, he has proposed as an organic law of his empire, " toleration of all forms of worship not contrary to civil law, and that Catholicism receive no special favor, except that it be recognized as the national religion." This alone, was sufficient to render the priests unfriendly, but not content with this, he has gone farther. He has stated that he intends to revive the old privileges of the Spanish Monarchy, formerly exercised in Mexico, "of investing all prelates and regulating the temporal concerns of the clergy and religious institutions, according to the old Spauish laws." Thus he intends, in defiance of the Pope, to exercise a direct control over ecclesiastical affairs. But more than this, he has actually refused to restore the property which formerly belonged to the Church: The Republican party when in power, passed a decree, confiscating ecclesiastical property and limiting the privileges of the clergy, and it was this which caused the Roman Catholics to oppose them, and to aid in their overthrow. When these ecclesiastics had effectually assisted Maximilian, a devoted son of the Church, to ascend the throne, they confidently approached him, backed by a demand from the Papal Nuncio, requesting the restoration of their property, and the extension of their privileges. The reply of the young Emperor was not encouraging. However disposed he might be to promote the wishes of his faithful priests, he found it impossible to comply with the request, for the property had been sold, and the money spent, and the Government was too poor to appropriate millions for its purchase. Then instead he is much more likely still further to limit them.

That intention is to be gathered not from words but from deeds, and the first practical proof they can offer is Union or Confederation. Hence the significance of the news just received.

In the event of a war with the States, it is clear that all our Provinces must be placed under one military command. Do what we will, no unity of administration that we can establish will be equal to that of the invader. If this disadvantage be urged as an argument against the very attempt, it is our duty to reply that the Provinces farthest outlying from the Colonial centre and most obnoxious to the attack of the foe, are just those which would most depend upon our aid. That gives us a special voice in their case. - If the Maritime Provinces seriously intend to adhere to the British Crown, it is impossible to say what fleets, what garrisons, what iron clads, what ordnance we shall have to pour into Halifax and the other ports, all at our cost. Having, then, an additional right to speak in this case, we venture to say that if Nova Scotia and New Brunswick seriously intend to be loyal, they ought to act accordingly and declare for confederation. Their holding off can only be ascribed to a lurking wish to reserve their decision for the present, and see which way the wind blows. In the hour of actual resistance there must be union, and that union will be all the more easy and effectual from some previous use. Indeed, the matter is so plain that vacillation on this point can only be interpreted as wavering loyalty. The reasons that have been given against a Confederation, even in the cold form of a Zollverein, are of the most mercantile character.
