All smiles in which I took delight While yet they beamed for me, Have faded, and my darkest night Not one kind star can see! Alone! with lips that never show One smile to glad me as I go.

All prayers which I have, day and night, Poured out before my God, Seem lost, unanswered, and no light Gleams from the chastening rod. Alone! to strive and wrestle on, Though not one prayer its meed hath won!

All hands whose touch had thrilled me so, Whose clasp had grown so dear, Are closed to me, and I must go

Uncheered, unaided here! Alone ! . with not one hand to meet Mine own in sympathy so sweet! And yet, with empty hand and heart, Standing alone to-night, From all earth's sweetness far apart, Shadowed from all earth's light, I can look up with undimned eye : For God, my God, sits throned on high.

'Tis very dark! I cannot see The smile my Maker wears; I cannot tell what waiteth me In answer to my prayers; I cannot know how better far Than all my hopes, God's dealings are.

I cannot see the loving hand That marks my earthly way : Yet I can trust in that fair land My richest blessings stay; And so, though prayer be barren still, I trust my God, and wait his will.

Soon after Mr. Earlswood married again, and this time his choice might have atoned for his past unhappiness, for Mrs. Grantley was mild and gentle in disposition, ever seeking the happiness of those around her; but Mr. Earlswood had grown stern, morose and gloomy, and, worst of all, had sought refuge from his domestic misery in the very evil which had first caused it and his indulgence brought on violent attacks of gout, which sometimes made him unbearable. His eldest daughter Matilda spent much of her time with an aunt in London, glad to be away from her miserable home, and little Frank was too young yet to feel it; but the one upon whom the had been eating a costly dinner, an apparently old its heaviest weight fell was the eldest son, James. Tie was naturally refined and sensitive in disposition, possessing great talent united with a quick, intelligent mind, and a love of study, which, properly directed, would have made him a good and great man; but his father opposed his wish to go to a public school, as he did every other desire, and had a tutor at home for him; and so it was that, with every good feeling crushed, and every cherished hope and day-dream rudely thwarted and dispelled, at fourteen he was pion; you are""Who are you?" exclaimed Sue. gloomy in temper, and proud, haughty and defiant in "Madame de ----," was the reply, and the dis-

Mrs. Earlswood at first tried hard to win his confi ence and love, but soon thought it would be an im possible task, for he repelled her at every step, anonly grew "more cold and stiff than ever," as sh said. But Lucy, who was the former Mrs. Grantley' only child, would not leave him to himself as her me ther did, but, with her loving heart filled with pit for the poor unhappy boy, she made it the constan study of her life to cheer and enliven him, and after time he began to take an interest in her society: h would read to her and help her in all her studies, an thus they grew up together fast and firm friends. As James grew older, he became tired of his mone onous life at Earlswood; he wished to go to college or to London, or anywhere, so that he might stud, and prepare himself for a public life, but his father re solutely opposed it; and now James had formed a acquaintance with several wild and dissipated your men of fortune, friends of Edward Mortimer, who re sided in or near C---.

Mrs. Mortimer was an old and tried friend of Mrs. Earlswood, and it was her sincere wish that her so Edward should marry the gentle and amiable daughter of the latter, which hope seemed in a fair way t be realized, for each found pleasure in the other's sc ciety, and they had been for sometime engaged.

A pressing invitation for the Earlswood family t spend New Year's Day at Mortimer House had me with a petulant refusal upon the part of its head t spend the day anywhere but at his own home, wher o gaieties of any kind were allowed. Mrs. Earlswoo of course must stay at home with him, and the young er members, who gladly accepted it, were ordered t return the same night, and informed that the door would be bolted and barred, and the household retir to rest at their usual hour-eleven. This, it must b allowed, was indeed provoking, but Lucy obeyed, an she and little Frank departed at the appointed time but James indignantly refused to be " treated like child," and it was only upon Lucy's earnest entrea ties that he promised to return at twelve.

Lucy knew that Edward and James had forme nany undesirable acquaintances, but she had no ide before that evening at Mortimer House to what an ex tent they both allowed their love for the exciting antime-destroying practice of gambling to carry them not that either of them drank to excess-that dis grace had yet to come; but in the constant society of those who did, who could say how long it would b absent? But before Lucy lay down to rest the night, she made a resolution concerning them bot which she intended to put in practice the followin

CAUTION! CAUTION! CAUTION THE Proprietor of PICKSTONE'S WASHING AN CLEANSING CRYSTAL, deems it his duty to car on the public against spurious imitations of his high elebrated Washing Crystal, which is the most harmle compound extant. It is free from Lime, Vitriol, and ner deadly mixtures so common to be found among rashing compounds. Try Pickstone's Washing Crysta f you want ease, comfort, and economy in washing, which washes every thing, and has rapid sale.

It will be found invaluable for the following domest purposes, viz.:—It washes all fine things, such as Musling Lace, Crotchet Work, Baby Linen, &c,; cleaning Sponger Combs, and Brushes; removing stains from the hands, an grease from Carpets, Cloth, Flannel, &c. It makes Har Water Soft, and may be used with good effect in Baths, t immediately removes all condensed perspiration from the skin. A small quantity should also be used in the for oan. It forms a cooling and cleansing wash for the heat y dissolving a teaspnonful of the Crystal in a quarter pint of water; and for cleansing the Mouth, Teeth, ims, it is quite a luxury, by adding a teaspoonful to mbler of water. It renders linen beautifully white, an
