" Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what He hath done for my soul." From childhood I had heard the truth, It often moved my heart to tears; My parents taught my early youth, And watered with care my growing years.

How often, when I've thus been taught, The tear has stolen to my eye-I've gone alone, and wept, and thought, "Oh! can it be that I must die!"

And when I've heard God's children pray, Or heard His servants preach His Word, Something within me oft would say-"O that I were a child of God."

But wicked mates and sinful plays, When vain amusements rose to view, Led step by step in error's ways My heart grew hard and thoughtless too.

Instruction sounded on my ear, Correction checked my wandering feet; Thanks to my parents for their care, Peace to their ashes while they sleep.

But oh! I found the spell too strong, The charm had seized my inward part, I sought among the careless throng Those pleasures that allure the heart.

Then on a bed of sickness I Was brought to feel as none can tell-I thought "how dreadful if I die, And my poor soul should sink to hell." But when my health returned again,

I sought the charms of sinful bliss-And thus for years I lived in sin, With intervals of thoughtfulness. Once in a common storm at sea,

The tempest howl'd, the billows roar'd; It was a dreadful storm to me, I felt and feared the wrath of God. In every howling of the blast,

I seemed to hear my MAKER's voice, And feel the piercings of his eye. My broken vows pressed on me then, And sin lay heavy on my heart,

In every flash across the sky,

And o'er them all I vowed agair, And thought to act a faithful part. But when the storm had ceas'd its strife, The lightning-blaze no longer burned-

I sought my former course of life, And to my sinful ways return'd 'Twas thus my stiff, unconquered will Yielded elastic to the blast, But, Pharoah-like, grew harder still,

As storms and plagues went gently past. When twenty years were almost gone, And I had long quite thoughtless been-

A christian damsel did me warn; I felt the sinfulness of sin. (Though she long since has gone from earth,

And I am still a pilgrim here; I pause to own departed worth, And to her memory drop a tear.) Oh! what a gloom all nature wore!

Sin lost the charms it had before, Nor did I wish them to return. When all within me humbly bow'd And pardon sought with earnest cries, Oh, how my heart did inly mourn!

By faith I heard my SAVIOUR'S WORD, As if 'twere spoken from the skies. My wounded heart long prest with sin, Caught with delight the healing sound-

Peaceful and calm were all within, Serene and pleasant all around. The uncaged bird, with nimble wing,

Could not so much her freedom prize, Nor man such joys as I could sing, Nor soar so high as faith could rise.

WHAT BECAME OF THE BOY WHO HAD A STRONG WILL.

was a little stream which flowed beside a mill and turned a water-wheel. The wheel was connected may point out. - Exchange. with a cloth-factory, and everybody who passed by it heard the rumbling of the wheels and the clatter of all the machinery. The name of the manufacturer was Mr. Berg, who had gained a large fortune by this business. One evening he sat in his house at his writing-desk, surrounded by a large number of account-books, and a multitude of various papers and writings were spread out before him. His superin. tendent sat near him, and the two talked together | the pain concerning the prospects of the business for the coming year. The wife of the manufacturer entered the room, and he thus addressed her:

"Where is now your brother Edward, dear Emma? for I think he is in a fair way to ruin himself, and I am very anxious that he should engage in manufacturing with me."

has just got, which is full of pictures of animals and various natural objects."

"Foolish fellow that he is !" replied Mr. Berg. "I have now supported that boy five years, at school and at the university, and he is just as ungrateful as ever. I have repeatedly ordered him to work in the manufactory, but he will not do it; but I will make him, you may be sure of that."

Scarcely had these words escaped the lips of Mr. Berg before Edward came into the room with a large engraving of certain plants that grow in the forests of Brazil.

"What beautiful pictures these are !" said he, half wild with joy, and thinking everybody must be pleased with them as well as himself.

" Away with you and your pictures too," said Mr. Berg. "If you do not let your foolish studies alone, and help me in the factory, I will never do anything

"My dear brother," replied Edward, "my tastes are very different from yours: you are fond of manufactures, and I am fond of studies. Now, if you were to undertake to study, and I were to undertake to become a manufacturer, we would both be very unhappy. The good Lord has made use of different tastes, and has designed us for different objects. You have been very kind to help me to an education, and I shall always thank you for it; but do not blame me for being fond of study."

"I do blame you," replied he, "for being so foolish as to spend all your time at books, and walking through the forest like some insane person. Now,

"Well," said Edward, "if I must take my choice our worldliness.

pelled to leave your house."

Mr. Berg saw in a moment that he had gone too far, but the pride of his nature would not permit him to retract, and he said very little more to Edward that evening, but did not recall the alternative that he had made. The next morning Edward was not at the breaklast-table, and immediacely Mr. Berg and his wife suspected that he had gone. Little Emma was sent up to his room to see if he was awake. No answer came, and the little forsaken girl stood there, hoping to hear her uncle's pleasant voice. But Edward was far from that room. By that time he had reached Berlin, and was prebably on his way from that city to Hamburg, to take passage to Brazil, if by | Cotton Goods of ever ings, 2 King Street. chance he could find a vessel there for that distant MAug 16

Four months after this time, Edward was wandering through the great forests of Brazil, and gathering before. He passed through many districts where fe- April 5. ver prevailed, but, by care, and by trusting in his DER "CARRIE Walland C."-150 tons, Refined IRON Heavenly Father, he was preserved from harm. He spent three years in South America, and made very extensive discoveries in the natural world. This, however, was only a plan that he had adopted by which he might be supported until he could publish his book. Having completed his manuscript, it was immediately accepted for publication by the largest publishing house in Paris. It contained the results of his observations in South America, with full engravings of all the remarkable objects in natural history that he had there met with for the first time. The book at once made A Lot of Youth's Bootees, Nos. 9 to a great excitement, and was well received, not only in France, but through the continent, and even in Great Britain.

One winter evening, Mr. Berg was reading the last paper that he had received from Berlin, and chanced to light upon an extended notice of Edward's book. Never having heard the first word from his brotherin-law from the time that he left until that moment, he was greatly surprised at what he read. His wife had spent many a sad hour in thinking upon her brother's probable death, and she was immediately called to listen to the notice of his great book.

The months rolled around, and in the course of time Mr. Berg's birthday came. It was an occasion of great festivity, and in the evening he made a large Now's the time to fill your ALBUMS! ment in his house for his operatives. It was none other than Edward, the renowned naturalist and traveller. His brother-in-law was astonished beyond measure to see him, and his sister had not passed such a happy hour during all the years of "Welcome home again," said Mr. Berg. "I ask a thousand pardons for the insult I gave you the night you lest my house. You taught me a lesson then that I have never forgotten-that God has made us all different, since he designs us each to do a different work. Welcome to my festivity, very welcome to my house. Let this be your home, and whether you travel or study, it makes no difference to me. Follow your taste, for you have done a service of which I am even more proud than yourself." Edward put his hand in his pocket, and drew from it a diamond ring, which he put upon his sister's finger, and then took from his trunk two models of machinery, which he explained to his brother-in-law in a very short time. These were two inventions of Edward, which he had made during his spare hours in South America. They were both calculated to be of great service in the factory, for one, if it proved a success, would save the labor of five men, and the other would accomplish the labor of eight. In a few months' time two large machines were made after the little models belonging to Edward, and introduced into the factory of Mr. Berg. They worked like a charm, and at the close of the first day of their successful operation, the proprietor said to his brother-

"My dear brother you have done for me and for the world, by these two machines alone, far greater service than you could have done if you had been working in my factory. Thanks for your genius; thanks for following your taste; thanks for the goodness of God, who has led you to success! AN APT REBUKE.

A little girl of five years lately learned the followng verse to repeat in the Sabbath school:

"God judgeth the righteous, and God is angry with the wicked every day." During the week she pricked her finger, which became so sore and inflamed that she cried bitterly with Her mother, annoyed by her cries, thoughtlessly told her that if she did not keep quiet, her finger might burst and blow the roof off the house. At first the poor child was greatly terrified at the thought of such a catastrophe, but a moment's reflection convinced her of its impossibility, and looking at her mother through her tears, she said solemnly: "Indeed I cannot tell," replied his wife; "very Oh, ma! God is angry with you, for my verse likely he is in his own room studying a new book he says, 'God is angry with the wicked every day,' and you are wicked, for you have told me a lie!" It is to be hoped that this affecting reproof from an innocent child may strike to the heart of this, and of every other unreflecting, mother, who may read this imple sketch, and cause them to take heed to their ways that they sin not with their tongues.

The most gratifying proof of the expansion of the business is exhibited in the one following fact—that the increase alone of the last three years exceeds the entire business of some of the existing and of many of the recently defunct fire insurance companies of this kingdom.

The recent returns of duty made by Government for this ter year (1858) again show the "Royal" as more than aintaining the ratio of its increase as stated in former years. Only one among the London insurance offices exhibits an advance to the extent of one-half the increase of the Company, while all the others respectively fall far short of the
