A very melancholy accident occurred a few days ago, up the Maduxnakik Stream, Mr. Isaac Teeling, from Eel River, who was lumbering some fifteen or twenty miles up the stream, was prying at a log, when his hand-spike lost its hold, and he fell backward, the back of the neck striking against a windfail and his spine thus receiving a mortal injury. He was brought in on a sled on Thursday morning, and died Friday morning. - Woodstock Acadian.

JOHN H. SURBATT. - Nearly eighteen months have passed since the death of the principal conspirators in the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, and still the plot remains a mystery. A bright theatre-Death leaping on the scene-a wounded man at bay in a Virginian barn, defying his pursuers, and shot by the blunder of a soldier-a sick man's bed, and the assassin with his knife at his throat-the secret consultations of murderers, coming and going under various names and disguises-these are the figures in that terrible picture, in which, like those of Rembrandt, vast shadows enshroud a fierce and lurid light. The gallows, with four corpses, and one of them a woman -the Dry Tortugas, where four convicts expiate in wretched solitude their crimes - a quiet grave far away in Illinois-these are its companion pictures, and yet there is one more terrible. It was that of a man flying from the land where he was born; flying from the avenger Death, from the body of his victim, from the corpse of his mother on the scaffold, seeking in vain to lose himself in the great world, and to blot his name from the memory of man. This is John Harrison Surratt, of whose equal guilt in the crime there is no doubt, and by whom, it is believed, much that is bidden may be revealed.

The evidence taken before the Military Commission in June, 1865, proved John H. Surratt to be one of the principal conspirators. It was at the house of his mother that the meetings were held; up to the week of the assassination he had been journeying between Richmond and Montreal; Booth was his constant companion; Mudd concealed him in the woods near his house; Payne consulted with him; Atzerodt confessed that Surratt induced him to join the conspiracy. His name was the first in the indictment. Had there been any doubt of his guitt his flight would have removed it, for though none of the principles were more frequently seen up to the 3d of April, on the afternoon of the 4th he was seen for the last time, booted and spurred, ready for his escape. From that time the very existence of John Surratt was a mystery; it was believed he was dead; that he had revealed the names of his fellow-conspirators to the government, and had been allowed to escape; that he was secretly imprisoned. It was noted that no reward was offered for his arrest. Yet, as time passed on, John Surratt was forgotten, till the other day came the startling news that he had been arrested by the American Consul General in Egypt.

Of his wanderings little is known. It is said that he was recognized on a Liverpool steamer shortly after the murder. We know now that he had been a soldier in the Papal Zouaves at Veroli, and served under the name of John Watson. The fact became known to Mr. Rufus King, our Minister at Rome, who telegraphed to our Government, and was in structed to secure his arrest. Mr. King conferred with Cardinal Antonelli, who issued an order for his seizure. Surratt was taken; he was imprisoned; and on removal from jail, guarded by five soldiers, broke from their hands, jumped, it is said, over a precipice more than 100 feet high, and escaped into Italian territory. Mr. Marsh, our Minister at Florence, obtained telegraphic instructions from the Italian Government to have all the scaports of Italy watched to prevent his escape. He was soon supposed to have gation fees in French ports. embarked in a steamer for Malta, and a despatch to that island arrived too late to detain him; another was sent to Alexandria, and when Surratt stepped upon the shores of Egypt, he was seized by the strong, far-reaching arm of America. United States detectives, it is said, have watched him since October. But long before this he must have been overtaken by a speedier, surer foe. Fear was ever at his back; from remorse he could hardly escape, for even if he could forget the crime he had committed, how could he ever cease to see the phantom of his mother on the gallows? Coward all the world believed him, since that day when he fled and let her to suffer; a coward, it was said she held him, and in her last moments refused to hear his name. - N. Y. Tribune.
