IMMORTALITY.

BY FRANCES DE HAES JANVIER. "O Death! where is thy sting? O Grave! where is thy victory? Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."-1. Cor. 15: 55-57.

Who deems the Saviour dead? And, yet he bowed his head; And while in sudden night the sun retired, And through thick darkness hurled Rolled on the shuddering world,

The mighty Son of God, in blood, expired! Expired-but in the gloom And silence of the tomb, Death's mystery unveiled to mortal sight;

Triumphant o'er his foes, A conqueror he rose, And from the grave commanded life and light!

And shall we count those dead For whom the Saviour bled, And died, and rose, and lives for evermore? And were the grief and loss,

The shame, and scourge, and cross, Endured in vain by Him whom we adore? And shall his children fear, When that great hour draws near, Which gives them immortality with God?

Should not our souls rejoice To hear our Father's voice, And gladly take the path the Saviour trod? Through death's deep shadow lies Our journey to the skies, And all beyond is light, and life, and love:

The dead whom we deplore Have only passed before, And wait to greet us in the world above!

Then let the summons come Which calls our spirits home, From sin, and pain, and sorrow, ever free! Where weary ones may rest Upon that Saviour's breast, Whose death revealed our immortality!

"What are you doing now?" he inquired. "Working in a machine-shop in Brooklyn. I have been fireman, and often worked the engine. I think I could get along pretty well with one now, if any-body will have a little patience with me."

"Do you ever drink liquor?"

He looked up with an expression of astonishment on his countenance that such a question should be asked, but answered firmly: " No, sir."

"Do you chew, or smoke, or go to the theatre?" And if she didn't, I could make a better use of it. I'd like to have some books if I could only spare the money to get them." "Do you go to church or Sunday-school?"

He held down his head, pretending to brush the dust off the floor with his foot, and replied: "No, sir."

"Why not," asked the gentleman, a little sharply. "I haven't any clothes fit to wear," he replied. "It takes all the money I can get for us to live; and I can't have any clothes." He looked down at his coarse and well-worn suit. "It didn't use to be so when father was living. I was brought up to go to church and to Sunday-school. If I can get to be an engineer, we shall go again. I know I can run an engine."

Telling him to call at a certain time, when he expected his engine would be ready for use, and he would talk further with him, he dismissed him. "But he must have that engine," said the merchant to a friend, to whom he related the circumstance. "He will make a man that boy will. A boy who is determined to be something; who gives his mother all his money to lighten her burdens; who does not use tobacco, and does not go to the theatres; who for?" spends his evenings in study after working all day such a boy will make a man, and deserves to be helped. I have not told him so, but I shall take him and put him under one of my engineers until he is fully capable of taking charge; then let him have the engine. He will get twenty dollars a week then instead of five, and be able to lighten a mother's burdens, have clothes to wear to church, and buy books to aid him in his business."

THE LITTLE "JAIL BIRD."

"Mayn't I stay, ma'am! I'll work, cut wood, go for water, and do all your errands." The troubled eyes of the speaker were filled with tears. It was a lad toat stood, one cold day in winter, at the outer door of a cottage on a bleak moor in Scotland. The snow had been falling very fast, and the poor boy looked very cold and hungry.

"You may come in, at any rate, till my husband comes home. There, sit down by the fire ; you look perishing with the cold," and she drew a chair up to the warmest corner; then suspiously glancing at the boy from the corners of her eyes, she continued setting the table for supper.

Presently came the tramp of heavy boots, and the door was swung open with a quick jerk, and the husband entered, wearied with his day's work.

A look of intelligence passed between his wife and himself. He looked at the boy, but did not seem very well pleased; he nevertheless made him come to the table, and was glad to see how heartily he ate his TAT HERRINGS .- Hourly expected ex packet "Juliet'

Day after day passed, and yet the boy begged to be kept until "to-morrow;" so the good couple, after due thought, said that as long as he was such a good boy, and worked so willingly, they would keep him.

One day in the middle of winter, a pedlar, who often traded at the cottage, called, and after selling his goods, was making ready to go, when he said to

"You have a boy out there splitting wood, I see," pointing to the yard.

"Yes; do you know him?"

" I've seen him." "Where? Who is he? Where is he?"

"A jail bird," and the pedlar swung his pack over his shoulder. "That boy, young as he looks, I saw in court myself, and heard him sentenced-"Ten months." You'd do well to look carefully after him." Oh, there was something so dreadful in the word "jail!" The poor woman trembled as she laid away the things she had bought of the pedlar; nor could she be easy until she had called the boy in and assured him that she knew the dark part of his history. Ashamed and distressed, the boy hung down his head. His cheeks seemed bursting with the hot blood, and his lips quivered.

"Well," he muttered, his whole frame shaking, "there's no use in my trying to do better, everybody hates and despises me; nobody cares about me." "Tell me," said the woman, " how came you to go, so young, to such a dreadful place? Where is your
