NOT NOW.

"He that had been possessed with the devil prayed Him that he might be with Him." Not now, my child-a little more rough tossing-A little longer on the billows' foam-

A few more journeyings in the desert darkness, And then the sunshine of thy Father's home ! Not now-for I have wanderers in the distance,

And thou must call them in with patient love; Not now-for I have sheep upon the mountains, And thou must follow them where'er they rove. Not now-for I have loved ones sad and weary;

Wilt thou not cheer them with a kindly smile? Sick ones, who need thee in their lonely sorrow, Wilt thou not tend them yet a little while?

Not now-for wounded hearts are sorely bleeding. And thou must teach those widowed hearts to sing; Not now-for orphan's tears are quickly falling; They must be gathered 'neath some sheltering

Not now-for many a hungry one is pining; Thy willing hand must be outstretched and free; Thy Father hears the mighty cry of anguish, And gives His answering messages to thee.

Not now-for dungeon walls look stern and gloomy. And pris'ners' sighs sound strangely on the breeze Man's pris'ners, but the Saviour's noble freemen; Hast thou no ministry of love for these?

Not now-for hell's eternal gulf is yawning, And souls are perishing in helpless sin; Jerusalem's bright gates are standing open-Go to the famished ones and fetch them in.

Go with the name of Jesus to the dying, And speak that name in all its living power; Why should thy fainting heart grow chill and weary? Canst thou not watch with Me one little hour?

One little hour! and then the glorious crowning-The golden-harp strings and the victor's palm-One little hour? and then the Hallelujah! Eternity's long, deep thanksgiving psalm!

From the Watchman and Reflector. THE MESSENGER. BY LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON.

The pastor-Mr. Clyde-sat alone in his study one Monday morning, oppressed by a beavy weight here the preparation for the life hereafter, has had gard face. such hours. At least, to every sensitive, easily-discouraged soul they are familiar.

If you are a physiognomist you might have read Mr. Clyde's character by looking at him. His head | ting down near him. was high, rather than broad. He was deficient, perhaps, in the combative element. And the sky was very blue, but no angel face looked from its deep stillness; the air was full of balm, but no white wing cleft it; the birds sang, but wide quiet of the landscape he saw but one moving figure—a little girl coming across the fields.

he saw that she wore no familiar aspect. The graceful tidiness of the village girls was wanting to her. She walked carelessly, her feet encased in great, heavy boots, utterly regardless of stone or marshstraight on, towards his house-on, into his yard. | Heavenly peace was in his soul; and he felt no sense With a vague wonder he reached the door as soon as she did, and met an unknown face. "If it's not too much trouble, sir, could you go thoroughly one lesson. In after years, when from with me a couple of miles into Tiott's woods? My father is in a great strait to see you, and he don't

"Who is your father?" "Jake Robinson, sir."

Jaka Robinson! The minister drew a long breath of wonder. The man had never set foot in his church, in any church, probably. No one knew of Street. any actual crimes which he had committed, but then he looked capable of any crime. Mr. Clyde had met him once in the woods, and knew him by the evil eyes gleaming out from under heavy, black brows, which had made every one call him "Black Jake," His means of living were uncertain-a day's work, here and there; bunting, fishing, his own scanty garden, mysterious absence now and then, when he might have been reasonably enough concluded to be seeking employment in other towns, but when the public imagination chose to suppose him busy in some unproved deeds of darkness. What could Black Jake want of him?

A man of stronger physique than the minister might well have been excused for some reluctance at the thought of going into the heart of the woods to meet this stranger of whom he heard only evil. But Mr. Clyde was not wanting in courage. If any idea of personal danger crossed his mind it only served to exhilarate his depressed his spirits and vitalize his languid pulses.

"Of course I will go," he said, "but is your father sick? Why does he want me?"

"I don't know, sir. I don't think he's sick. He don't eat much, though. He's been going on strangely, and he told me to fetch the parson. Says he, 'I'll try bim. '"

What this trial was to be the minister could not guess. He took his hat and cane, and stepped into another room just to say to his wife that he was sent for to see a man, and might not be home until late. Then he walked away rapidly, determined that she should ask no questions, and gain no knowledge to cause her an anxious day. He followed the quick tootsteps of his curious guide across the fields, wondering vaguely on what errand he was going; but his spirits rising with the quick motion and the free air -conscious, all the while, of the blue sky, the soft, As the Subscriber intends devoting his whole thick grass, the songs which the birds sang to himbeginning, too, to feel that he was not alone, to remember who had said, "My presence shall go with thee all the way."

They came into the woods, at length, the dense green woods; where the sunlight was tempered, and glinted softly through the thick boughs, and the very song of the birds grew awesome in the stillness. On, Business, he has determined to sell his whole until they came in sight of a long, low, one-story house-brown with the rains and snows of many slow years-a house that made you think of barracks, or a hospital, or a rope-walk, perhaps, but never of a home. It is possible that just one shade of fear colored the wondering expectation which hurried Mr.
