GOOD WORDS.

Courage, worker, do not stumble
Though thy path be dark as night:
There's a star to guide the humble:
Trust in God, and do the right!"

Perish "policy" and cunning!
Perish all that fears the light!
Whether losing, whether winning,
"Trust in God, and do the right!"

Trust no party, church, or faction;
Trust no "leaders" in the fight;
But in every word and action
"Trust in God, and do the right!"

Trust no lovely forms of passion—
Fiends may look like angels bright;
Trust no custom, "school," or fashion:
"Trust in God, and do the right!"

Simple rule and safest guiding,
Inward peace and inward might,
Star upon our path abiding:
"Trust in God, and do the right!"

Some will hate thee, some will love thee,
Some will flatter, some will slight;
Cease from man, and look above thee:
"Trust in God, and do the right!"

CHARLIE'S PROMISE, AND WHAT CAME OF HIS KEEPING IT.

DEDICATED TO MY S. S. CLASS OF BOYS.

By Clara A. Sylvester.

Charlie, I'm going to leave you to keep shop this afternoon—what do you say to that?" It was a great, broad-shoulderd, good-natured-looking man who spoke, and he patted the shoulder of a boy who stood by his side and looked down fondly into his face as he did so.

"I'll do the best I can, uncle," said the boy, raising his head and looking half shyly into the gray eyes bent upon him.

"That will be enough," replied the man, laying his great hand upon the boy's curly head, "well enough. I expect your handsome face will bring me lots of custom."

"I hope not," said Charlie, speaking quickly, and as if he couldn't help it.

"What's that? You hope not, you young rogue?"

Charlie's face grew crimson and then pale again, as he met his uncle's half-playful, half-angry gaze, and he said timidly, "Some kinds, uncle, I'd like to help—but—don't be angry, uncle—"

"Angry? With you Charlie! I don't think I could, unless you did something very bad. You have your mother's face, boy,—her eyes and smile; poor, dear Emily!"

"Uncle, I've got something to tell you."

"Well, well, child; not now! I'm in a hurry. While I'm gone, if Harris or Bunker come in here after something to drink, you tell 'em they must wait till I come back. They might take too much and be troublesome. If little Kitty Simpson comes, you get her some of the best of brandy. Her father is having a regular soak of it at home. He'll have delirium tremens, and then Dr. Gordon will have to set him right again. Poor fool!"

"But, uncle——"

"All you've got to do is to promise me that you will not touch the kegs for Harris or Bunker."

"If I promise you'll expect me to keep my promise? Even if they are angry, the promise will be binding all the same, uncle."

"Surely. But they won't be, I wish they would. Always keep your word, always, Charley. A boy's promise is as sacred as a man's."

"I suppose some promises are more sacred than others, uncle; aren't they?"

"I don't know what you are driving at. Yes, I suppose it might be worse to break faith under some circumstances than others."

"Isn't it worse to break an oath than a simple promise?"

"Some folks think so. But boy, a lie is a lie and truth is truth, any way you fix it. Don't quibble, boy, but stick straight to your word."

"Well, uncle, I promised my mother I would never taste, or buy, or sell intoxicating drinks. I promised it kneeling beside her dying bed, with one hand upon the Bible and the other clasped in both hers. And uncle, I will do all I can in the store to help you, I will saw your wood and work like a beaver for you, but I cannot buy, or sell, or have anything to do with your wine and brandy. Don't be angry, uncle, but indeed I cannot do it."

The boy's dark eyes were swimming in tears now, as he raised them to his uncle's face. A very dark, angry face it was just then.

"Well, sir, I see now what you are driving at, plain enough! You come here to preach temperance to me! My business isn't respectable enough for you! I've been licensed for years to sell liquors, and I was never complained of yet for selling to drunkards. I never sold any man a drop when he'd got too much! I sell to the most respectable men in town; to lawyers, doctors, and ministers!"

Perhaps I ought to tell you, boys, that all this happened before the temperance reform, and when it was considered respectable and fashionable for everybody to drink wines and brandies. God grant that we may never drift back to those old customs!

Mr. Allen went on still more angrily. "I should think you'd be afraid your bread and butter would be tainted with liquors! I wonder you can condescend to live with a man that supports you by selling liquors, even to respectable men!" Oh, the scorn and anger hidden in those few words! Charlie saw and heard it all, and he thought to himself, "I shall have to leave uncle's—I don't know what will become of me, but I can't help it."

But he said timidly, as he looked up in his uncle's excited face, "but, uncle, respectable men become drunkards sometimes, and if somebody hadn't sold to these poor drunkards in the first place, they wouldn't be drunkards, would they?"

But the angry man made no reply, he only walked up and down the floor, saying, half to himself, "Oh, but I did not think when I took my dead sister's child to my heart, that I was nursing a viper that would sting me so."

"Oh, uncle Charles, I'm sorry you are so angry with me. I'll go away—I'll go to sea, or something. But there is one thing mother wanted me to tell you. It was just before she died, and she could not write. She said so solemnly, "Tell your uncle Charles, Charlie, that I have been praying for him that no man may rise in the judgment and say, Charles Allen made me a drunkard!' Oh, uncle, somebody made father one!"

The last words were spoken in a husky whisper, with quivering lips and streaming eyes. Mr. Allen made no answer, but with something between a groan and a sob, he rushed out of the store and was soon seen driving rapidly down the street. Oh, the visions that memory brought to his soul during that four miles drive! Visions of young men who had taken their first glass of wine at his table or in that little back room in his store—where were they now? Alas! he seemed to hear them say, "Who made me a drunkard?" "And me?" "And me?" Visions of his darling sister as a merry child, a beautiful maiden, a happy bride, and, as he saw her last, a sad-eyed, but loving wife and mother, cheerfully leaving home and friends for the far West, vainly hoping to find safety for her husband—but "somebody" had made him a drunkard? Who was it? Charles Allen did not dare to answer that question. He quieted his conscience with, somebody would have sold them liquors—I'm not to blame, and I'm not going to be driven out of my business! It is a mean business! After I get rich enough, I'll leave it—but I've lost more than I've ever gained. My mother used to tell me the Lord wouldn't let me keep these unjust gains—well, I'll see! I'll see!"

[Conclusion next week.]

THE LITTLE GIRL THAT HELPED THE MINISTER.

Nellie was just three three years old the first time she went to church.

"Now, darling," said her mother, as she fastened her cloak, and then gave her sweet lips a kiss, "you must help the minister this morning."

"Me, mamma," and a puzzled wondering look came into the little one's face. "How can I help him?"

"Shall I tell you about a child that helped the minister?"

"Oh, do, mamma."

"Well; a little girl about as old as you are was taken to church one Sunday by her mamma; and she sat so very still, looking straight at the minister all the while he was preaching. Some children, and some grown people, too, I am sorry to say—do not behave so well, but are restless and inattentive, looking about and even whispering sometimes; all of which must be very unpleasant and discouraging to the minister who is talking to them and trying to make them understand God's holy laws."

"And was that all?" said Nellie, as her mother stopped speaking.

"That was all. The little girl helped the minister by sitting still and listening."

"How do you know it helped him?" asked Nellie.

"Because he told her mother so."

"Did he?"

"Yes. He said when people sat still and listened it was a great deal easier for him to preach; and that when he looked at the sweet, earnest eyes of her child fixed on him through all the sermon, it made his heart feel warm, and helped him to forget the inattention of others."

"I'll be very good and listen," said Nellie, in her earnest way.

And she kept her word. She stood up when they sang and knelt when they prayed; and during the sermon sat very still, with her eyes on the minister, listening to what he said, and trying to understand him. And, small as she was, her ears took in a great many things that were remembered after she came home.

"What did the minister tell you, Nellie?" asked her father. "I saw you listening to all he said."

"He said we must be good if we wanted to go to heaven," Nellie answered, as she lifted her clear eyes to her father's face.

"And what else did he say?"

"He said everybody must be like little children; but I don't know about that."

"You don't understand it, you mean?"

"No, papa."

"It means that all men and women are God's children, and must obey him just as little children obey their parents."

"Oh, yes, I know that. You and mamma, and Aunt Jane, and the minister are God's children, and must do just what he tells you."

"Yes, if we want to go to heaven and be happy forever."

In the afternoon the street bell rang, and as Nellie happened to be in the hall, she went to the door and opened it. Who should be standing there but the minister?

"Why," said he, as he stooped down and kissed Nellie, "if this isn't the dear little girl that helped me to preach this morning! Shall I tell you how it was?" he went on, as he led her into the parlor and lifted her on his knee. "Well, it was just in this way. You helped me by sitting still and looking at me and listening; and you did it so nicely. Some people—grown-up ones too, I am sorry to say—sit uneasily, stare about, and even whisper during the sermon. This makes the minister feel badly, for he can't help thinking that his preaching is dull and useless. This morning a good many in the congregation didn't seem to listen at all. I saw two young ladies whispering together nearly all the time; three or four were so sleepy that they kept nodding every few minutes; a number did nothing but stare about—I'm sure they didn't hear a word I said. When I looked at them I felt discouraged; and then I would look towards your pew, and there you were with your eyes fixed on me and your face all attention. I said, "There is one dear little girl who is listening for God's Word, and I'll preach for her if no one else in the congregation hears what I say. And that is the way you helped me."

There was a strange, glad feeling in the heart of Nellie. And when she told her mother, afterwards, all about it, she said, in her simple, earnest way:

"It made me so happy to think I had helped him." Children's Hour.

WHAT IS A LIBRARY?—While recently engaged in arranging a large library, a friend came in to lighten our labors by pleasant conversation.

"What is the most common idea of a library?" said he.

"A workshop, perhaps, in which are all manner of tools."

"What is your idea?"

"A dictionary, and in which we can turn to any given subject, and find the information we desire."

"Very fair, both these definitions; but I think I know of one much better. When about sixteen years of age, living as a neighbor of Dr. Mason, and also a member af his congregation, I was engaged in helping him to move and arrange his valuable library."

"'Hamilton,' said he, 'you bear a great name, a very great name; but it is still more honorable to bear the name of Christ. Hamilton, do you know what a library is?"

"'No, sir.'"

"'Well, sir, it is an army. Do you see those books? They are my soldiers. I am the centurion. I call them down, and make them fight for me, my boy. Now you know what a library is, which is more than most folks do. Don't you forget it.'"—Star.

JUVENILE ENQUIRY.—Mamma, said a child, my Sunday-school teacher tells me that this world is only a place in which God lets us live a little while, that we may prepare for a better world. But, mother, I do not see anybody preparing. I see you preparing to go into the country—and Aunt Eliza is preparing to come here. But I do not see any one preparing to go to heaven. If everybody wants to go there, why don't they get ready?

THE ROYAL INSURANCE COMPANY, 92 Lombard-street, London, and Royal Insurance buildings, Liverpool.
Chairman of the London Board.—SAMUEL BAKER, Esq.
Chairman in Liverpool.—CHARLES TURNER, Esq.
The Royal Insurance Company is one of the largest Offices in the kingdom.
At the Annual Meeting held in August 1859, the following highly satisfactory results were shown:—
FIRE DEPARTMENT.
The most gratifying proof of the expansion of the business is exhibited in the one following fact—that the increase alone of the last three years exceeds the entire business of some of the existing and of many of the recently defunct fire insurance companies of this kingdom.
The Premiums for the year 1855 being.....£130,060
While the Premiums for the year 1858 are.... 196,148
Showing an actual increase of..... 66,088 or upwards of 50 per cent. in three years.
The recent returns of duty made by Government for this latter year (1858) again show the "Royal" as more than maintaining the ratio of its increase as stated in former years. Only one among the London insurance offices exhibits an advance to the extent of one-half the increase of the Company, while all the others respectively fall far short of the moiety of its advance.
LIFE DEPARTMENT.
The amount of new Life Premiums received this year is by far the largest received in any similar period since the commencement of the business, and must far exceed the average of amount received by the most successful offices in the kingdom. The number of policies issued in the year was 832, the sum assured £387,752 6s. 8d., and the premium £12,354 3s. 4d. These figures show a very rapid extension of business during the last ten years. Thus:—

Years.	No. of Policies.	Sums Assured.	New Premiums.
1848 .	99	£48,764 17 0	£1,380 9 1
1850 ..	190	95,650 9 11	2,627 4 7
1852 ..	422	181,504 10 6	5,828 5 10
1854 ..	408	161,848 13 4	4,694 16 0
1856 ..	703	297,560 16 8	8,850 3 11
1858 ..	832	387,752 6 8	12,354 3 4

The remarkable increase in the business of the last four years, is mainly consequent upon the large bonus declared in 1855, which amounted to no less than £2 per cent. per annum on the sums assured and averaged 80 per cent. upon the premiums paid.
