APRIL.

April has searched the winter land, And found her petted flowers again : She kissed them to unfold their leaves, She coaxed them wih her sun and rain, And filled the grass with green content, And made the weeds and clover vain.

Her fairies climb the naked trees, And set green caps on every stalk; Her primroses peep bashfully From borders of the garden walk; And in the reddened maple-tops Her blackbird gossips sit and talk.

She greets the patient evergreens, She gets a store of ancient gold, Gives tasseled presents to the breeze, And teaches rivers song of old-Then shakes the trees with stolen March winds And laughs to her the cuckoo scold.

Sometimes to fret the sober sun, She pulls the clouds across his face; But finds a snow-drift in the woods, Grows meek again, and prays his grace; Waits till the last white wreath is gone, And drops arbutus in the place.

Her crocuses and violets Give all the world a gay "Good year !" Tall irises grow tired of green, And get themselves a purple gear; And tiny buds, that lie asleep On hill and field, her summons hear.

She rocks the saucy meadow-cups; The sunset's heart anew she dyes; She fills the dusk of deepest woods With vague, sweet sunshine and surprise, And wakes the periwinkles up To watch her with their wide, blue eyes.

At last she deems her work is done, And finds a willow rocking-chair, Dons spectacles of apple-buds, Kerchief and cap of almonds rare, And sits, a very grandmother, Shifting her sunshine-needles, there.

And when she sees the deeper suns That usher in the happy May, She sighs to think her time is past, And weeps because she cannot stay, And leaves her tears upon the grass, And turns her face and glides away. -Atlantic Monthly for April.

SUN STREAKS.

Robert Simpson was not a happy man, and yet he had wealth, and everything to make home happy. He had a wife and three beautiful children. He was prosperous in business, and stood high on 'change, and his paper was always good in the market. But Robert at home was not happy, and this embittered all his enjoyments.

He pushed his business to keep himself from care; and the only satisfaction he had, was in pursuing his calling. A cloud darkened his brow just as soon as be turned his face towards home in the evening, at the close of the business of the day.

Well, what was the matter with Robert? I will tell you. His wife did not understand him, and treated him coldly, and sometimes wickedly. Mrs. Simpson was a woman of the world, proud, pretentious, fond of display and show. Her only object in life was self-gratification, and the praise of the fashionable world. She dressed well; yes, extravagantly so. Her two boys and daughter were the pride of all who saw them, for their neatness and elegance. But all her plans of life were laid outside of home, and belonged to the gay world around her. And home to Robert was a cold, cheerless, desolate place-a tent to eat and sleep in-nothing more.

Often would be come in at night, sad and desponding; but Robert was prudent and careful, and said nothing, but thought more. He soon retired to his chamber, and sought rest for the night, and from his daily anxieties. The times, just before the war, were getting bad in business circles. Robert had met with some losses, and his ventures in trade were in jeopardy. He was even annoyed on the street by suspicious creditors, but always stated honestly his circumstances. He came in one night, and laid aside his overcoat, and approached the fire, and sat down, looking into it with a long and steady gaze, and

Mrs. Simpson had been in her chamber through the day, and by chance she opened the Bible, and read, "Therefore, as the Church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything." She had often read it before, but more frequently, " Husbands, love your wife." She cast up her eyes upon the wall, and saw the marriage certificate the minister had given her just fifteen years before, on that very day. She looked at it very carefully "Ah!" said she, "the old pastor is dead!" She remembered him well, and all the incidents of that happy day. Many had envied her in having gotten so excellent a man for her husband. She had gone the next day into her own house, elegantly furnished, and determined to make her "dear Robert so happy !" And for the first six months she succeeded-But they had a little quarrel about some trifling matter, and she had never recovered from it. And thus she had cherished wrong feelings, until they had settled down into something akin to hatred, and she had adopted the fatal policy of plunging into the vortex of the fashionable world, to find the happiness which You see he had it for me, though we did not know she had sacrificed at home. HANS, THE CRIPPLE.

A soldier's widow lived in a little but near a mountain village. Her only child was a poor cripple. Hans was a kind-hearted boy. - He loved his mother, and would gladly have helped to bear the burdens of poverty, but that feebleness forbade it. He could not even join in the rude sports of the young mountaineers. At the age of fifteen years he felt keenly the fact that he was useless to his mother and to the

It was at this period that Napoleon Bonaparte was making his power felt throughout Europe. He had decreed that Tyrol should belong to Bavaria, and not Austria, and sent a French and Bavarian army to ac-The Tyrolese resisted valiantly. Men, women, and children of the mountain land were filled with zeal in the defence of their homes. On one occasion ten thousand French and Bavarian troops were destroyed in a single mountain pass, by an immense avalanche of rocks and trees prepared and hurled upon them by an unseen foe.

A secret arrangement existed among the Tyrolese, by which the approach of the army was to be communicated from village to village by signal fires from one mountain height to another, and materials were made ready to give instant alarm.

The village where Hans and his mother lived was in the direct line of the route the French army would take, and the people were full of anxiety and fear. All were preparing for the expected struggle. The widow and her crippled son alone seemed to have no part but to sit still and wait.

"Ah, Hans," she said, one evening, "it is well for us now that you can be of little use; they would else make a soldier of you."

This struck a tender chord. The tears rolled down his cheeks. "Mother, I am useless," cried Hans, in his bitter grief. "Look around our village-all are busy, all ready to strive for home and fatherland-I am useless."

"My boy, my kind, dear son, you are not useless to me,"

"Yes, to you; I cannot work for you, cannot support you in old age. Why was I made, mother?" "Hans, Hans," said his mother, "these repining thoughts are wrong. You will live to find the truth of our old proverb:

God has his plan For every man." Little did Hans think that ere a few weeks had passed, this truth was to be verified in a remarkable Easter holidays-the festive time of Switzerlandcame. The people lost their fears of invasion in the spirit of the season. All were busy in the merrymaking-all but Hans; he stood alone on the porch of his mountain hut, overlooking the village.

In the evening of Easter, after his usual evening prayer, in which he breathed the wish that the Father of mercies would, in his good time, afford him some opportunity of being useful to others, he fell into a deep sleep.

He awoke in the night, as if from a dream, under the strong impression that the French and Bavarian army was approaching. He could not shake off this impression, but with the hope of being rid of it, he BUCKWHEAT MEAL. -20 cwt. Buckwheat Meal. For arose, hastily dressed himself, and strolled up the mountain path. The cool air did him good, and he ATS. -2 Car Loads Black OATS, extra heavy, at the continued his walk till he had climbed to the signal pile. Hans walked round the pile; but where were the watchers? They were nowhere to be seen; perhaps they were busied with the festivities of the vilage. Near the pile was an old pine tree, and in its hollow stem the tinder was laid ready. Hans paused by the tree, and as he listened, a singular sound caught his attention. He heard a slow and stealthy tread, then the click of muskets, and two soldiers crept along the cliff. Seeing no one, for Hans was hidden by the old tree, they gave the signal to some comrades in the distance.

Hans saw instantly the plot and the danger. The secret of the signal pile had been revealed to the enemy; a party had been sent forward to destroy it; the army was marching to attack the village. With no thought of his own peril, and perhaps recalling the proverb his mother had quoted, he seized the tinder, struck the light, and flung the blazing turpentine

The two soldiers, whose backs were then turned to the pile, waiting the arrival of their comrades, were seized with fear; but they soon saw there were no foes in ambush-none but a single youth running lown the mountain path. They fired, and lodged a bullet in the boy's shoulder. Yet the signal fire was blazing high, and the whole country would be roused. It was already aroused from mountain-top to mountain-top. The plan of the advancing army was defeated, and a hasty escape followed. Hans, faint and bleeding, made his way to the village. The people with their arms were mustered thick and fast. All was consternation. The enquiry was everywhere heard, "Who lighted the pile?" "It was I," said at last a faint, almost expiring voice. Poor crippled Hans tottered among them saying, "The enemy-the French were there." He faltered and sank upon the ground. " Take me to my mothr," said he, "at last I bave not been useless." They stooped to lift him. "What is this?" they cried; "he has been shot. It is true; Hans, the cripple, has saved us."

They carried Hans to his mother, and laid him before her. As she bowed in anguish over his pale face, Hans opened his eyes and said, "It is not now, dear mother, you should weep for me; I am happy now. Yes, mother, it is true,

CLEANSING CRYSTAL, deems it his duty to caution the public against spurious imitations of his highly celebrated Washing Crystal, which is the most harmles compound extant. It is free from Lime, Vitriol, and all other deadly mixtures so common to be found amongst washing compounds. Try Pickstone's Washing Crystal, if you want ease, comfort, and economy in washing, which washes every thing, and has rapid sale It will be found invaluable for the following domestic ourposes, viz. :- It washes all fine things, such as Muslin Lace, Crotchet Work, Baby Linen, &c,; cleaning Sponges, Combs, and Brushes; removing stains from the hands, and grease from Carpets, Cloth, Flannel, &c. It makes Hard Water Soft, and may be used with good effect in Baths, as immediately removes all condensed perspiration from the skin. A small quantity should also be used in the foot pan. It forms a cooling and cleansing wash for the head, by dissolving a teasphonful of the Crystal in a quarter of tumbler of water. It renders linen beautifully white, and anlike other preparations, at the same time preserves the It contains nothing injurious to life. A child eatg it by mistake, will not be injured If you have not used this Cleansing Crystal, lose no time in obtaining it. Nothing has ever been introduced into this country which has effected such a wonderful hange upon Washing Days. It saves your time-saves your clothes saves your money; and it does not injure most delicate hands. Pickstone's Cleansing Crystal makes washing a pleasure, reduces the cost of fuel, the wear and tear of labor, and improves every article washed. For Linens, and heavy washes, it cannot be surpassed; for Laces, and fine fabrics, it is unequalled. It does not njure the color of Prints, but strengthens and improve hem--by its use they retain their original brilliancy. Flaneis become white and soft like new. White things are nuch improved, and keep their color, even if put by for months. Thousands of Families made happy! No misery on a Washing Day, with Pickstone's Cleansing Crystal. JOHN ARMSTRONG & CO. Lemont's Variety Store.
