REST.

"There remaineth, therefore, a rest for the people of Ob, toilers in life's vineyard, Who sigh for perfect rest, Whose dim eyes, peering upward With weight of tears oppressed, Look for the blissful slumber God gives to His beloved ; Wait till the day is over, And He the task has moved.

Here, where the long, long morning Melts into busy noon, The hours are all unrestful, But evening cometh soon: Lo, on the upreared mountain The first, faint shadow lies, And God will draw His curtains Over the far-off skies.

Short slumbers has the pilgrim, His ready staff in hand ; The soldier may but linger Till the foe is in the land ; The child must hasten homeward, O'er hill and field and dell; And the golden gates are open, Where they each in rest shall dwell.

Oh, weary heart, take courage ! Oh, feet, march on awhile; Oh, busy hands, still labor; Tired eyes shall see Him smile, Who has within His keeping, Still waiting for your claim, The perfect rest of heaven, The gladness of His name.

No storm disturbs the waters, No wind shakes that repose; No trampet calls to battle, Nor triumph then the foes. Though season follow season, And year fade into year, That rest is still remaining, That heaven shall still appear.

Take up the burden, Christian, And bear or labor on;

Only a little sorrow, And the kingdom shall be won.

Only a few more footsteps,

And then the tranquil rest; Only a few more longings, And then the sheltering
