THE POWER OF PRAYER.

The clock was on the stroke of twelve, at "noon of night," as Mrs. Raymond rose quietly from her bed and silently dressed herself.

Hayden was not there? The bed was undisturbed and the window open. "Where is he? What can this mean?" she mildly questioned herself.

Hayden Raymond was at that restless age when boyhood is warring and manhood is still in the distance.

Hayden's father was a calm, even-tempered Christian farmer, and would rather have employed his son at home, but the boy, from choice, had been during the busy farming season.

It is all the old gentleman agreed to say in, but it is just nothing to what he has got. "O mother, you never saw such a great roll of bills!"

"Where is he? Where is he?" she asked again and again. "Perhaps he did not see the barn. Quickly as the thought came, she started out.
