"I will, child," she said, clearing her throat, and wiping her eyes with her old red handkerchief; and Hetty nestled down on the floor beside her, and took the cold thin hands in hers.

It was a dreary story, like how many others that fresh young thing, full of hope and sunshine, with a warm, loving heart, which had been sought and won city again. by a young sailor, who seemed all she could desire.

He went to sea, and then came years of trouble and sickness; and the pretty Roxana grew faded and wan and hopeless, as month after month passed away without any news of the absent one. Her father died, her mother became insane; and at her death, after two or three years of misery and anxiety and terror, Roxana was left, a worn-out, broken down invalid, to "come upon the town."

Then the young sailor suddenly returned. But the pale, wasted pauper was a different thing from the blooming girl he left behind him; and the brighteyed, sunny-hearted maidens who had grown up in his absence were more winsome now; and the proud Roxana's sinking heart reliaquished its claim with out a word of complaint. That was long ago. His wife had been a widow for years, and his name was almost forgotten. And through all those years of poverty and desolation, without a gleam of heavenly comfort, poor Roxana had mourned and brooded over her troubles, until everything seemed utterly dark and hopeless, and her distrust and suspicion and irritabi-

Hetty was young, and knew little of set phrases or hackneyed consolations ; but Miss Roxy's story of the city. touched her heart, and tears of tender pity rolled down her cheeks. Oh, what a balm to that poor old heart were those tears ! The dim old eyes grew dimmer with unwonted emotions, and slowly a great tear trickled down the withered face. Hetty did not know what comforting words to say : so, in the simplicity of her heart, she patted the poor old hands, and said, " Don't cry, Miss Roxy! I will love you, and God will love you if you trust him; and he can comfort you. I used to feel lonesome once, even has not only grown very rich, but by his means with father and mother and the boys. Somehow, thousands of people are fed on wholesome food at the tion and sale of DEBENTURES and STOCKS, and the inthere was an empty place in my heart, and a longing cheapest rate, and hundreds of men, women and vestment of capital on need to at moderate charges, and for something better; and I've found it now since"- children are put in the way of earning an honest with the atmost promptness and fidelity. Hetty hesitated-" since I think our Saviour has be- living, and that, too, by gathering up what others come my friend. O Miss Roxy! that makes all the throw away. Besides all this, he gives a great deal difference. I think if you loved him you would be happy." "Child, help me!-show me how," faltered Miss Roxy feebly. And so Hetty told her how has given us, nobody is so poor or so humble but the Messrs. DANIEL & BOYD, the light of God's love entered her own heart; and world can be made better by their living in it. - ALEX. JARDINE, Esq., "Hon. S. L. SHANNON, Halifax. poor Miss Roxy listened with many a sigh, and yet Child's Paper. with a new gleam of hope in her face. Those loving words, those pitying tears, had opened a new world to her.

" I must be going !" exclaimed Hetty, suddenly descent. "Mother will wonder what has become of me;" and gathering up her things, she prepared to go. "What a lovely view !" she cried, as her eye caught a glimpse of the ocean. "I don't see anything lovely in those nasty stables," said Miss Roxy contemptuously, involuntarily taking up her old strain.

" But beyond and above all is so bright and beantiful !" said Hetty. " It is nicest to see the pleasant | U superior quality, in all numbers, at lowest prices. things, I think, and notto mind what's disagreeable." | Nov. 11

Throughout this establishment there is the greatest order and neatness, for the master is always present, and his eyes do more work than both his hands.
