Has never died away. And prayer is made, and praise is given, By all things near and far; The ocean looketh up to heaven, And mirrors every star.

Its waves are kneeling on the strand, As kneels the human knee; Their white locks bowing to the sand-The priesthood of the sea!

They pour their glittering treasures forth, Their gifts of pearl they bring, And all the listening hills of earth Take up the song they sing.

The green earth sends her incense up From many a mountain shrine; From folded leaf and dewy cup She pours her sacred wine.

The mists above the morning rills Rise white as wings of prayer; The altar curtains of the hills Are sunset's purple air.

The winds with hymns of praise are loud, Or low with sobs of pain, The thunder organ of the cloud, The dropping tears of rain.

With drooping head and branches crossed, The twilight forest grieves, Or speaks with tongues of Pentecost From all its sunlit leaves.

The blue sky is the temple's arch, Its transept earth and air, The music of its starry march The chorus of a prayer.

So Nature keeps the reverent frame With which her years began, And all her signs and voices shame The prayerless heart of man.

THE DWARF OF THE BLACK FOREST. Guelph was a hideous-looking object. He had not a straight limb, or a straight bone in his body. He was hunch-backed: his legs were crooked; his feet were twisted; his arms were out of shape and out of joint; his eyes were turned in their sockets; he had no hair on his head. In short, Guelph was a horrid object. But how did he become so? Ah! that is what I want to tell you. He was once as straight as anybody. He could dance, and jump, and play as well as any of his mates. But Guelph had one fault: he could not bear to be denied anything. Whatever he wanted, he felt as though he must have, and could not live without; and he wanted it immediately, too. He could not endure to have teachers and masters over him, because he wanted to do as he pleased. He hated schools and lessons, because they kept him from play. And when told that a boy must have teachers and lessons, and must spend some time in hard study, or he would grow up to be a miserable, idle, worthless fellow, Guelph said he didn't care; he would be willing to be a good-for-nothing, if he could only do as he pleased now.

One afternoon, Guelph had strayed away under the trees of the black forest, and lying down upon a mound of moss, he began talking aloud to himself complaining of all the hard tasks he had to do, and couragement received from you, and having supplied wishing that he could only be let alone, and allowed | my shop and tavern with a new and ample stock of to do just as he pleased; he didn't care what the con. | choice Wines, Spirits, and Malt Liquors, I thanksequences might be. This is looking object, with no power to move about like horrible! But a conclave, composed of infernals, other boys, but perfectly helpless.

I suppose, continued Mr. Buckley, my young to prevent this danger to our craft. friends think that Guelph was very foolish, and deserved to be what he became—the miserable little of my scholars will become just such creatures as

Of course, the children of the school opened their eyes in astonishment at this remark.

Let me explain what I mean, said Mr. Buckley. You all have bodies, arms, hands, legs, and feet, which grow and strengthen day and night so quietly and so slowly, that you hardly perceive the growth; and with ordinary care for your health you grow up to be men and women. The laws of health are so simple, that you obey them almost without knowing what they are. But what is a man or woman worth, who has nothing but a well shaped and healthy bodywho does not know how to read, how to spell, how to write, how to cipher, how to work; who will steal, and lie, and commit murder? What would such a creature be worth? What good would it do him or her to have strong limbs and good health? Such a person is no better than a fat ox, or a great dog. So you see that human beings have something besides a body to care for, in order to be good for any thing. They have to make for themselves a character. They have to form habits of industry and application, of honesty and kindness.

And God has made our bodies and limbs so that with very little care they will grow of themselves, purposely, that we may have time to attend to these things that will not come of themselves, -our habits, and our character. Children are placed under the care of parents and teachers, and have tasks and lessons given them, on purpose, that when they grow up, they may have minds that can think, and plan, and calculate, -characters that will enable them to be of use to the Church, to their country, and to society; that they may be good and pious Christians, To increase further the Proportion of Profits and kind and honest citizens.

wrong, he twisted one of his limbs, and it remained twisted. When you tell a lie, you twist a moral principle; and by forming the habit of telling lies, the moral principle becomes so twisted, that when you grow up you cannot tell a straight truth. You form the habit of picking and stealing, -of neglecting the lessons, or lazily performing the work your teachers or parents give you to learn or do, and so twist yourself into a confirmed thief or robber, or a dissolute, lazy vagabond. Every time you do what you know to be wrong; every time you neglect to do what you know is right, you are giving a twist which will make you a bad-shaped, hideous dwarf and monster in your mind, habits, and character, just as Guelph was in

When Guelph saw how out of shape he was becomof disobedience, or idleness, or profanity, or lying, or stealing, you must stop, ere you get so badly twisted that you cannot get straight. But Guelph did not keep his good resolutions, and by and by it was too late to change his habits; his limbs stiffened in their crookedness. Then, if he could, he would have given up all the idle hours he had spent, all the pleasures he had enjoyed, for the privilege of being straight once more. But it was too late for Master Guelphtoo late. And so, many men would endure all the tasks that they had escaped by idleness, sacrifice all that they, when children, had wrongfully gained, and for the sake of which they had twisted their minds, and habits, and character, to be saved from the consequences they had brought upon themselves! But alas! it is too late for them now-too late. - From " The Boys of Ellenwood School."

LAZARUS & MORRIS' CELEBRATED PERFECTED

SPECTACLES

THE large and increasing sales of these SUPERIOR GLASSES is a sure proof of their superiority. We were satisfied that they would be appreciated here as else where, and that the reality of the advantages offered to wearers of our beautiful lenses, viz.: the ease and comfort the assured and readily ascertai the sight, and the brilliant assistance they give in all cases, were in themselves so apparent on trial, that the result could not be otherwise than it has, in the almost general
