OUR CHILDHOOD. BY GEORGE D. PRENTICE.

'Tis sad, yet sweet, to listen To the soft wind's gentle swell, And think we hear the music Our childhood knew so well; To gaze out on the even, And the boundless fields of air, And feel again our boyhood's wish To roam like angels there !

- There are many dreams of gladness That cling around the past-And from the tomb of feeling Old thoughts come thronging fast ; The forms we loved so dearly In the happy days now gone, The beautiful and lovely, So fair to look upon.
- Those bright and gentle maidens Who seemed so formed for bliss, Too glorious and too heavenly For such a world as this ; Whose dark soft eyes seemed swimming In a sea of liquid light, And whose locks of gold were streaming O'er brows so sunny bright.
- Whose smiles were like the sunshine In the Spring time of the year-Like the changeful gleams of April, They followed every tear ! They have passed-like hopes-away, And their loveliness has fled ; Oh! many a heart is mourning That they are with the dead.
- Like the brightest buds of Summer, They have fallen with the stem ; Yet, oh ! it is a lovely death To fade from earth like them !
- And yet the thought is saddening To muse on such as they, And feel that all the beautiful Are passing fast away! That the fair ones whom we love Grow to each loving breast Like the tendril of the clinging vine, Then perish where they rest.
- And we can but think of these, In the soft and gentle Spring, When the trees are waving o'er us

DEBT.

When I was a very small boy, in pinafores, and went to a woman's school, it so happened that I wanted a slate-pencil, and had no money to buy it with. I was afraid of being scolded for losing my pencils so often, for I was a real careless little fellow and so did not dare to ask at home; what, then, was John to do? There was a little shop in the place, where nuts, and tops, and cakes, and balls, were sold by old Mrs. Dearson, and sometimes I had seen boys and girls get trusted by the old lady. I argued with myself that Christmas was coming, and that somebody or other would be sure to give me a penny then, and perhaps even a whole silver sixpence. I would therefore, go into debt for a slatepencil, and be sure to pay at Christmas. I did not feel easy about it, but still I screwed my courage up, and went into the shop. One farthing was the amount; and as I had never owed anything before, and my credit was good, the pencil was handed over by the kind dame, and I was in debt. It did not please me much, and I feit as if I had done wrong ; but I little knew how soon I should smart for it. How my father came to hear of this little stroke of business I never knew, but some little bird or other whistled it to him, and he was very soon down upon me in right earnest. God bless him for it ; he was a sensible man, and none of your children-spoilers; he did not intend to bring up his children to speculate, and play at what big rogues call financiering, and therefore he knocked my getting into debt on the head at once, and no mistake. He gave me a very powerful lecture upon getting into debt, and how like it was to stealing, and upon the way in which people were ruined by it; and how a boy who would owe a farthing, might one day owe a hundred pounds, and get into prison, and bring his family into disgrace. It was a lecture, indeed ; I think I can hear it now, and can feel my ears tingling at the recollection of it. Then I was marched off to the shop, like

SHINING LIGHTS.

BY UNCLE EDWARD.

Down deep in the bowels of the earth, Billy Graves was going along one of the passages of the mine to his place of work, when, by the light of the little lamp that was stuck to the front of his be as rotten touch wood .- John Ploughman's Talk. cap, he saw something white, and picked it up. It was a leaf from somebody's Testament that had fallen out.

Billy took his lamp from the front of his cap, and by its dim light tried to read; but he was a poor reader at best, and kept losing his place. So he stuck his lamp against the wall of the passage, and then he could keep his big, grimy finger under the word he was spelling out. Often working at it for a long time, he made out this from the page: "The blood of Jesus Christ, his son, cleanseth from all sin."

"Hey?" said he to himself, " what can that be all about ?"

So he stuck his lamp back on his cap, and went on till he came to where he was to work. Right by him worked Tony, and Billy said :

"Tony, what d'ye suppose it all means?" and he got out his bit of paper, and by the help of his little lamp, that Tony held so near his nose that it would have burned it, if it hadn't been a safety lamp, he read it again :

"The blood of Jesus Christ, his son, cleanseth from all sin."

"I don't just know," said Tony ; "but I've heard that same before somewhere, and I don't just know what it may be. I don't mind askin' the boss : maybe he'll tell." So they laid the whole matter before the boss, and all three lamps, Billy's, and Tony's, and the boss's, were brought to bear on the paper; and the boss, who was a good man, told them the sweet story of Christ.

in the depth of the mine shone for them through that little paper, clear on to the bright gates of heaven, though it was shining so far down in the dark mine.

Cally Eastis ran away from home, and went to sea, when he was only fourteen years old; and that his mother was watching for him. Though the store as she went to church. the poor candle didn't give much light in the dark, and many a fisherman out on the water would say-" It's Goody Eustis's light awaitin' for that boy Cal of hers."

So they would steer by it, and feel safe because it was there.

a deserter marched into barracks, crying bitterly all down the street, and feeling dreadfully ashamed, because I thought everybody knew I was in debt. The farthing was paid amid many solemn warnings, and the poor debtor was set free, like a bird out of a cage. How sweet it felt to be out of debt! How did my little heart vow and declare that nothing should ever tempt me into debt again! It was a fine lesson, and I have never forgotten it. If all boys were inoculated with the same doctrine when they were young, it would be as good as a fortune to them, and save them wagon loads of trouble in after-life. God bless my father, say I, and send a breed of such fathers into Old England to save her from being eaten up with villainy; for what with companies, and schemes. and paper-money, the nation is getting to
