of his crib. "Where are you going, Theodore ?" she inquired. "Only to get my pocket-book that father put in my stocking when he came home last evening," was his confident answer.

There was not the slightest doubt in this dear child's mind that when he put his hand in his stocking he should find there the promised gift. And he was rewarded.—American Messenger.

Can humble itself in the dust.

Yet, when tested, small faith moves the mountain, And bids it far yonder depart; One drop from Calvary's fountain Takes mountains of guilt from the heart.

brother Eddie. He held one of my hands in both of his, trying to tie my fingers together, all the while prattling in innocent glee; but I scarcely heard a word he said ; my gaze was rivetted on the blushing fruit of a strawberry bed, and I was endeavoring to persuade myself that it would be no very great harm to take just a few, even if mother did not wish me to eat them.

"O your fingers are so short, they won't tie !" exclaimed Eddie throwing down my hand. "Sister, do look at your kitten; she is up in the tree going to catch a bird."

"Hush! leave the kitten alone; I am going to get some strawberries," I said pettishly.

Eddie turned his bright eyes full of wonder upon me. "But, sister, ma told us not to eat them pretty things have very sharp stings." until they got better ripe."

"Ma will never know it, without you tell; I know I will not; not even if she whips me;" and I turned from him and went toward the bed of strawberries.

Eddie stood for a moment irresolute, and then he joined me, and soon our fingers and lips were stained with the juicy berries. I did not enjoy them, for I knew I was doing wrong. I had not only disobeyed my mother, but I had caused my little brother to do the same. And I kept thinking of the prayer I had repeated at my mother's knee the night before-of the part "Lead me not into temptation."

Neither Eddie nor I saw the face of an older brother thrust through the garden fence, intently regarding us. The remainder of the day passed wretchedly; nothing could amuse me. LITTLE THEODORE'S FAITH.

faith ?" Let me illustrate the simple act of faith S. S. Times. by the story of little Theodore.

He was a very little boy, but a trusting, simpleminded child. His parents had always been very particular to perform all their promises to him, and be called faith.

This little boy had, for several days, some cents in his pocket, and one day, when his father took out his pocket-book to pay a man some money, he. said : "Father, I wish I had a pocket book to put my cents in.",

His father replied : "My son, I am going to buy a new pocket book for myself, and then you shall have my old one."

This promise made little Theodore very happy, and he often talked about it, and once or twice he said: "Father, have you bought your new pocket-book yet ?"

One morning he asked his father this question at the breakfast table, adding: "Father, I know that when you do buy a new one, I shall have the old one."

"I shall be very busy at my office all day," replied his father, "but this evening when I go to buy some other things, I will buy my new pocketbook, and you shall have the old one."

This satisfied this dear little boy, and he said nothing more on the subject during the day, though, no doubt, he often thought of the promise. After tea his father went out, and, as Theodore was occupied with looking at pictures, he did not notice his absence.

"I remember," says the celebrated Wesley, "hearing my father say to my mother. 'How could you have the patience to tell that blockhead the same thing twenty times over ?' 'Why,' said she, 'if I had told him but nineteen times I should have lost all my labor." "

"There is nothing for me to live for; I wish were dead ;" said a despondent and despairing per son. "That might not help the matter. If you are not satisfied with God's government in this world I don't know why you should be in another," was the rebuking reply of a wise friend.
