ONCE-AND NOW!

The governor of a large prison received some half dozen convicts whom he was to have charge of, for the years of confinement to which they had been sentenced. Among them was one who seemed overcome with shame; and it was plain that he was a arm, and rudely pulled him to his feet, and was about young man of good education. They were all put in separate cells, out of which they only came for the hours of work. The hands of that young man showed that he was not used to hard work; but he did every thing he was ordered to do, very readily, gave no trouble, and was always silent, and sorrowful. When it was found that he was one of the best behaved prisoners, the governor sent to ask him, whether he wished for any particular favour that could be granted to him. The young man begged, that he might have drawing-materials with which to spend some leisure-time in his cell. The governor had now taken such a liking to him, that he supplied him with what he asked, at his own expense, because the rules of the prison did not make provision for such things. But when he inquired of the keepers under him, what drawings the prisoner was making, they could not tell: he seemed to hide them away under his bed-clothes when he left his cell; and they did not care about them. The governor desired them, to make no search; but he himself took the first opportunity he could find, to speak to the prisoner in gentle words, and to ask, had he finished any drawings. He answered, with some hesitation, he had. - Was he willing to show them ?-Kind words melted the young man's heart; he knew very well that the governor had power to command that he should show them, or to have them looked for and brought forth, whether he was willing or not. Now he burst into tears, and said, he was willing to show them to him, but he would rather they should not be seen by others. The governor went with bim to his cell, and the young man brought out his drawings; they were three, all of them exceedingly well done, showing the hand of an artist. The first was the likeness of a boy, healthy, cheerful, carrying his satchel and driving his hoop: as he showed it, somewhat of a smile passed over his sad countenance; this is what I was, he said. The next represented a young man, welldressed, at a writing desk, with books all about him in a well-furnished room: this is what I might have been, he said with deep sorrow. The third be only held before the governor with the words: You know what this is. It showed him in his prison-dress, in his cell, in his degradation.

By treating him with further indulgence and kind consideration, the governor induced him to give a full account of his course of folly and sin, to the commission of the crime which had consingned him to prison, His parents wished him to study the law; but he was fond of drawing, and did not take to books. He left his home, took lodgings, and fell into bad company. He did not earn money enough to pay his way; when he got into debt, he took to drinking, in order to drown care: he became quarrelsome, stab | complish these results. bed one of his companions who provoked him by moca little money. That brought him before the judge for an attempt at murder; and it consigned him to

STRIKING A CHILD IN ANGER.

A STORY FROM ACTUAL LIFE

claimed John Doring to his son William, a young lad | lege to be "somebody."-Dunn. of twelve years. 'Take that !' he added, striking the boy a heavy blow on the side of the head, 'and that, and that !' repeating the blows as he spoke, the last of which knocked the boy over the plough that was standing at his side. 'Get up, now, and go into the house,' continued the father, 'and see if you can't | finger-nails, indicate good breeding. Never leave keep out of mischief for a while; and stop that crying, or I'll give you something to cry for !' The boy started for the house, struggling to suppress his sobs as he went.

'It is astonishing,' said Doring, addressing a neighbor named Hanford, who was near in the barn, and of course had seen and heard all that had passed 'how troublesome boys are! Just see these oats, now, that I have got to pick up for that boy's carelessness,' and he pointed to a measure of oats which William had accidentally overturned.

'And was it for that trifle that you assaulted your I insects, birds, or animals.

child, and knocked him down?' replied Mr. Hanford, in a sorrowful tone. Doring looked up from the oats in surprise, and repeated-'Assaulted my child, and knocked him down! Why, what do you mean, neighbor Hanford? 'Just what I say. Did you not knock the child over that plough?' 'Why-well-no. He kind of stumbled and fell over it,' doggedly replied Doring. ' Do you go against parental authority? Have I not a right to punish my own children ?'

'Certainly you have,' responed Mr. Harford, 'in a proper manner, and in a proper spirit, but not otherwise. Do you think that a father has a right to revenge himself upon his child ?'

'Of course not,' but who's talking about revenge ?' 'Well, friend Doring, let me ask you another quesion; for what purpose should a child be punished? 'Why, to make it better-to do it good, of course,' uickly answered Doring.

'For any other purpose?' quietly asked Mr. Han-

'Well, no, not that I can think of just now,' replied Doring, thoughtfully.

'And now, friend,' kindly continued Mr. Hanford, do you suppose your treatment to your son, a few moments ago, did him any good, or has increased his respect and affection? The boy, I venture to say is utterly unconscious of having done any wrong, and yet you suddenly assaulted him with anger and violence, and gave him a beating which no penitentiary convict can be subjected to without having the outrage inquired into by a legislative committee. But let me tell you a story. You knew my son Charles?"

'The one that is now preaching in Charlestown?' 'Yes; you have probably noticed that he is lame?' 'I have noticed it,' said Doring, 'and asked him how it happened, and he told me he got hurt when a

'Yes,' responded Mr. Hanford with emotion, 'the dear boy never could be made to say that it was occasioned by his father's brutality. But listen, he continued, as he saw that Doring was about to speak : 'When Charles was about the age of your son William, he was one of the most active and intelligent boys I had ever seen. I was fond of him and Naught shall hide His gracious presence, or cloud especially of his physical beauty and prowess. But, unfortunately, I was cursed with an irritable and White the souls that Christ hath purchased, as the violent temper, and was in the habit of punishing my children under the influence of passion and vengean-

'One day Charley offended me by some boyish and trifling misdemeanour, and I treated him almost exactly as you treated your son a few moments ago. I struck him violently, and he fell upon a pile of stones at his side, and injured his left side so badly that the result was, he was crippled for life,' said Mr.

Hanford, in tones of deepest sorrow and remorse, and covered his face with his hands. A short period of oppressive silence followed, which was at last boken by Mr. Hanford's saying: 'When I found that my boy did not rise from the stones on which he had fallen, I seized him by the inging to my arm for support. 'Where?' I asked, in great alarm; for, notwithtanding my brutality I fairly idolized the boy.

'Here,' he replied, laying his hand upon his hip. 'In silence I took him in my arms, and carried him to his bed, from which he never arose the same bright, active, glorious boy that I had so cruelly struck down on that pile of stones. But after many months he came forth, a pale, saddened little fellow. hobbling on a crutch !'

Here Mr. Hanford broke down, and wept like a child, and tears also rolled down Doring's cheeks. When he resumed, Mr. Hanford said:

'This is a humiliating narrative, neighbor Doring, and I would not have related it to you had I not supposed you needed the lesson that it contains. It is impossible for me to give you any adequate notion of the suffering that I have undergone on account of my brutal rashness to my boy But, fortunately, it has been overruled to my own good, and to that of my family also. The remedy, though terrible, was complete, and no other child of mine has ever been pun. ished by me, except when I was in the full possession and exercise of my best faculties, and when my sense of duty has been chastened and softened by reason and affection. 'I devoted myself to poor Charley from the time he left his bed, and we came to understand one another as I think but few fathers and sons ever do. The poor boy never blamed me for blighting so much happiness for him, and I have sometimes tried to Feb. 18 think that his life is happier, on the whole, than it would have been had I not been taught my duty | King Street. through his sacrifice.

'Still, neighbor Doring, I should be sorry to have you and your son William pass through a similar or-

'I trust that we shall not,' emphatically and gravely responded Doring. 'I thank you for your story, friend Hanford, and I shall try to profit by it.'

And he did profit by it, and we hope that every parent, who is capable of striking his child in anger or petulance, that reads this sketch from life, will also profit by it.—Selected.
