THE RIPENING CORN.

How sweet to walk through the wheatland brown, When the teeming fatness of heaven drops down; The waving crop with its bursting ears A sea of gold on the earth appears; No longer dressed in a robe of green,

With twenty faces the fields are seen; A sight more welcome and joyous far, Than a hundred blood-won victories are.

Beautiful custom that was of old, When the Hebrew brought, with a joy untold, The earliest ears of the ripening corn, And laid them down by the altar's horn; When the priesthood waved them before the Lord, While the Giver of harvests all hearts adored; What gifts more suited could man impart

To express the flow of his grateful heart? A crowd awaits, 'neath the cottage caves, To cut the corn and to bind the sheaves; At length is heard the expected sound-Put in the sickle, the corn is brown; And the reapers go forth with as blythe a soul As those who joined the Olympian goal;

And sorrowless hearts and voices come

To swell the shouts of the harvest home.

And there is a resper on earth well known, Whose deeds are traced on the burial stone; He carries a sickle more deadly and keen Than e'er on the harvest field was seen: He cuts down the earliest ears in spring, As well as the ripest that times can bring; The tare he gathers to flames are driven, The wheat is laid in the gamer of heaven.

TOM.

HOW HE BECAME A MEMBER OF CONGRESS.

There was a little fellow among the New-England hills, years ago, as there are are many now, whose parents were poor. He could not remember the time when he wore shoes and stockings in the summer. Sometimes in the winter, when he was smith through snow drifts that did not melt until the last Tom, in a passion; "I'm going to Congress." every step he took. "How could a stump be the making of a man?" "My lad," answered the stranger, marking the white surface of the snow gently with his whiplash, "I was a poor boy, and my father could not afford to send me to school. We worked very hard but I used to study evenings by the light of the fire, and learned the whole of the Latin grammar by the light of one pitch knot."

For a moment Tom sat perfectly still. Then he asked, as if ashamed of his ignorance:

" Please, sir, what's a Latin grammar?" This last question aroused the gentleman, and becoming sensible that the little fellow at his side was thirsting for knowledge, he very kindly went over such parts of his history as he thought would be of interest to him, and ended by saying, that he was a member of Congress.

The last announcement almost took Tom's breath away. He had heard of the members of Congress, but he had an idea they were myths, whom nobody ever saw. Perhaps the awe with which Tom regarded him, as he glanced up sideways into his face, flattered the gentleman, for he said, smiling ;

"You are just as likely to be a member of Congress as I! You know, in America, success is to the determined and brave. If you study as I did you may possibly sise as high-yes, perhaps higher!"

"But I haven't any Latin grammar, sir," said Tom. "No? Well, would you like one?"

"Yes, sir," cried Tom with flashing eyes.

I will leave one at the school-house for you."

"But I haven't any money." "Never mind, you can pay me when you get to hey, my lad?" Nell tossed her head, and the boy soon lost sight of the rider. Then he looked down at his shoes, at his coat, and his old cap, as he hung it on the peg in the entry, and silently contrasted them all with the fur-trimmed overcoat and outfit of the stranger, "Never mind." said Tom to himself, "I will have them all, too, when I am a member of Congress." At the end of two weeks a bundle of books was left at the school house. There was not only a Latin-grammar, but a well-worn copy of Virgil, Esop's Fables, and sundry other volumes such as

Tom never saw. Pine knots were plentiful where Tom lived, and he sat up until midnight all the rest of the winter, the aid of complicated and costly machinery, warrants us pondering over the mysteries of those books. As luck would have it, the schoolmaster, who boarded around with his pupils, had not eaten the rations due him at Tom's father's. When he arrived; he entered warmly into the boy's ambitious projects, and as he had a smattering of Latin himself, was qualified to aid his pupil.

Although the schoolmaster was allowed the use of a tallow candle, he vastly preferred the more brilliant light of Tom's pitch knot : so that, as often as the long winter evening set in, the master and pupil might be seen (and were seen) sitting before the large fireplace with their heads buried in the pages of the books, along which they plodded slowly, but to such purpose that at the end of the winter Tom could read his fable and solve his problem in a manner very creditable to himself and
