THE LAND BEYOND THE SEA. The land beyond the Sea! When will life's task be o'er? When shall we reach that soft blue shore, O'er the dark strait whose billows foam and roar? When shall we come to thee, Calm land beyond the Sea? The land beyond the Sea! How close it often seems,

When flushed with evening's peaceful gleams; And the wistful heart looks o'er the strait and dreams! It longs to fly to thee,

The land beyond the Sea! Sometimes distinct and near It grows upon the eye and ear, And the gulf narrows to a threadlike mere; We seem half way to thee, Calm land beyond the Sea!

Calm land beyond the Sea! The land beyond the Sea! Sometimes across the strait, Like a drawbridge to a castle-gate,

The slanting sunbeams lie, and seem to wait For us to pass to thee, Calm land beyond the sea! The land beyond the Sea!

Oh, how the lapsing years, 'Mid our not unsubmissive tears, Have borne, now singly, now in fleets, the biers Of those we love, to thee, Calm land beyond the Sea!

The land beyond the Sea! How dark our present home! By the dull beach and sullen foam How wearily, how drearily, we roam, With arms outstretched to thee, Calm land beyond the Sea!

The land beyond the Sea! When will our toil be done? Slow-footed years! more swiftly run Into the gold of that unsetting sun! Homesick we are for thee, Calm land beyond the Sea!

The land beyond the Sea! Why fadest thou in light? Why art thou better seen towards night? Dear land! look always plain, look always bright, That we may gaze on thee, Calm land beyond the Sea! The land beyond the Sea! Sweet is thine endless rest, But sweeter far that Father's breast Upon thy shores eternally possest; For Jesus reigns o'er thee, Calm land beyond the Sea!

AMY'S TRIUMPH.

The short Winter day drew near its close, and the lengthening shadows cast a dreary look around the dull old school-room. The children began to exterior of the house; it was no difficult matter to grow restless. Little heads would turn toward the fancy from its appearance that the inmates were windows notwithstanding Miss Smith's remon- poor, but the room which Amy entered looked comstrances, and little feet would fidget about, while | fortable and neat, and even bore traces of better busy tongues could not be restrained from whispering. At last the day's tasks were done and the about the woman who sat at the table engaged in pupils dismissed; glad to be released, rejoicing to | sewing. be once more in the open air, free from the restrictions of school government, they came thronging out into the village street with more haste than gracefulness. With a whoop and a bound Ned Harris tossed his cap into the air, catching it with a flourish in regular school-boy fashion, while Hor- | laid aside her books, and was soon engaged in a ace Greer went through a series of gymnastics calculated not only to restore suppleness to his own | brought a smile to the mother's face; now and then limbs, somewhat cramped from the enforced quiet of the school-room, but to awaken the admiration for a familiar step, but time passed on the room of his companions.

"Agreed," responded Jack, and, suiting the ac- Amy was busy with her next day's lessons, and Mintion to the word, away went the boys at full speed | nie was engaged in reading a story book, quite dedown the street, followed by the shouts of the boys | lighted with the idea of being able to read it all herleft behind. In the meantime the girls with satch- | self. When the clock struck nine Amy rose and els in hand, came out, warmly wrapped up in com- pushed her book aside. Calling Minnie to her, she fortable shawls and cloaks, with their little hoods | tied a warm little hood over her bright curls, and drawn closely over their youthful heads. Talking wrapped her cloak closely around her; then, and laughing gayly they came out, if less noisy taking down her own out-door wrappings, she than the boys, yet seemingly as glad as they that | quickly put them on, glancing uneasily at her the day's lessons were over, and the school-room mother as she did so. Mrs. Martin sighed as she door closed behind them.

Miss Smith tried herself to-day; how could she be tect you, little darlings," she murmured as they left so cross?" and Mattie's bright eyes sparkled with the room. The night was very cold, and they a comical expression of amazement.

"Really," said Sallie Lind, "I was so frightened in that spelling match that I forgot every word of a lesson, though I spelled the whole column through to mother last night." "Dear me Sallie Lind, I think you took a wonderful sight of pains. I never trouble myself to do that. I don't fancy my mother would like turning school-mistress in that fashion either." "My mother is always willing to help me, Jennie French, and she don't consider it any trouble

"Well, you needn't be so snappish. Dear me, why, she puts on the airs of an injured queen, don't she, girls?" said Jennie; and thinking she had said something remarkably fine she turned scorn-"Do tell me, Sally," said Mami Fisher, " how in the world you managed to get all those horrid sums done right, every one of my answers were wrong." "O, mother helped her," laughed Jennie French. "Pray, did she ever teach school herself?" Sallie's eyes flashed fire, but she quietly replied.

"Yes, my mother did help me, and I am glad to be able to say, that, if she never taught school herself it isn't because she wasn't qualified." "High ho.! some people are wonderfully conceited. But, Susie Grey, how did you get yours! Miss Smith said they were right. I'm sure I'm as far advanced as you are, and they puzzled me so that I gave up in despair." "I came near doing so myself," replied Susie,

"but Amy Martin offered to show me how to do the first, and I managed to get through the rest with the aid of a few hints from the same source. You know Amy is a splendid scholar. I wish I knew half as much."

"Nonsense!" responded proud little Miss French, "I would'nt stoop to ask her help if I never got them !" "Why, Jennie French," cried half a dozen eager voices, "how strange you talk! Miss Smith says she will certainly win the prize." "That's easily accounted for; she's such an artful little thing, and Miss Smith, hasn't judgment enough to see it." "Why, Jennie, how can you say so! I heard Mr. Greer say she was the best reader in the whole school, and you can't say he is not a judge."

"Jennie is only jealous, that's all," laughed mis chievous little Mamie Fisher.

"I jealous-I, Jennie French, jealous of Amy Martin, that pale, mopish, little thing? Upon my word I think you must be losing your senses, Mamie Fisher, and I don't thank you for the compliment."

"Indeed, Jennie, I'd be very glad to have just half the knowledge Amy Martin has; and as for being either artful or mopish you are very much mistaken, she lives in our neighborhood, and is one of the best girls I ever knew."

"Humph you visit her, I suppose." "Yes, indeed, and love her dearly."

"Well, I'm sure I'd be ashamed to confess it." "And why? I'm curious to know."

gathering round. "Is it possible you don't know what a low family the Martins are?"

"Yes tell us your reason," echoed the rest,

"Why, Jennie, what has come over you to-day? Mrs. Martin is one of the kindest and best women I ever knew. When mother was sick last Spring she nursed her like a sister." "Yes," chimed in little Patty Greer. "And when Horace ran a nail in his foot, and we couldn't get a doctor, she came in, and with own hands drew out the nail, and tied up his foot as nicely as the doctor could have done himself. And I don't know any nicer girl than Amy. My mother likes to have her come to visit me."

"I'm glad I can't say that of my mother. I would'nt be seen with her. Why, just only think how poorly she dresses! I could buy every bit of trimming on her dress for half a dollar; and, besides that, her father's a drunkard, and her mother is no better than a common seamstress. The idea of associating with such people; why, it's perfectly absurd!" And the little lady drew herself up with a haughty air as she added; " Why, girls, did'nt you know it before?"

"Yes," said candid little Mamie Fisher, " to be sure we know they are poor, but that's no disgrace; and if her father does drink that's not Amy's fault,

"No, indeed," cried the girls, "and Amy is a favorite everywhere." "That's so," cried Patty; "she is a great deal better thought of than some folks I could name." "Thank you for that slur, Miss Patty Greer; it is as good as could be expected from a girl of your raising. Your favorite is coming, I see. I don't of Walaut Furniture, 24 styles Sofas and Couches, Bedroom

An awkward silence fell upon the group as Amy joined them; each looked at the other, and all turned a scornful look in the direction Jennie had

"Why, girls, what's the matter ?" playfully asked Amy; "have you seen a ghost?"

"No," replied Patty, "we've only been talking on grave subjects."

"And haven't got so far along as the ghosts, eh? Did you frighten Jenny away ?"

"No she left us of her own accord." And, anxious to avoid telling what had occurred, the girls changed the subject, and soon separated, each going her own way homeward. Amy quickened her steps and soon reached her home. There was nothing particularly inviting in the days, There was an air of grace and refinement

"Well, Amy dear," said she, looking up with a smile, "I'm glad you've come. Minnie is lonely and want's to be amused, and I'm so busy I can't half interest the child just now." Amy quickly put away her cloak and hood and romp with little Minnie. Their childish gayety she paused in her task, and seemed to be listening grew dark, and the lamps were lighted, and the "I say Jack," called out Will Payne, "lets's evening meal prepared, but the father did not come. Another hour passed, and still they were alone. watched the children making preparations for "Really," exclaimed Mattie Woods, "I think | going out into the darkness. "God bless and proshivered as the keen wind almost took them off "Yes, indeed, wasn't she cross though?" chimed | their feet, but, hand in hand, they walked on with courage remarkable in children so young.

[To be concluded.]

PLAIN SPEECH

Some eannot talk good plain English-cannot even avail themselves of intelligible decorations. Thus one minister describes a tear as "that small particle of aqueous fluid trickling from the visual organ over the lineaments of the countenance betokening grief." I have heard of one talking in the pulpit of "the deep intuitive glance of the soul penetrate beyond the surface of the superficial phenominal, to the remote recess of absolute entity, or being thus adumbrating its immortality in its precognative perceptions;" while another-and a highly eminent man, head of a college for ministerswhen he read a well-known passage of Scripture, shrunk from the plain vernacular, "He that believeth on me as the Scripture hath said, out of his -he took refuge in the classics, "his ventriculam shall flow rivers of living waters." Yes, preachers ought to know how to use words, or else calamities will happen. Take the following as an illustration: A clergyman while composing a sermon made use of the words "ostentatious man." Throwing down his pen, he wished to satisfy himself before he proceeded as to whether a great portion of his congregation might comprehend these words, and he adopted the following method of proof. Ringing the bell his footman appeared, and he was thus addressed by his master, "What do you conceive to be implied by an ostentatious man?" "An ostentatious man, sir," said Thomas; "why, sir, I should say a perfect gentleman." "Very good," observed the vicar; "Send Ellis, the coachman here." "Ellis," said the vicar, "what do you imagine an ostentatious man to be ?" " Sir," said Ellis, " why I should say an ostentatious man means what we calls, saving your presence, a very jolly fellow." It is hardly necessary to add that the vicar substituted a less ambiguous word. "What induced you to send for me?" very pompously said the clergyman. "Eh?" "What induced you," he repeated, "to send for me?" "What does he say?" said the man to his wife. "He says what the deuce did ye send for him for !"-Paxton Hood.
