THE INDEPENDENT FARMER. Let sailors sing of the windy deep, Let soldiers praise their armor, But in my heart this toast I'll keep,-The Independent farmer. When first the rose, in robe of green, Unfolds its crimson lining, And 'round his cottage porch is seen The honeysuckle twining; When banks of gloom their sweetness yield. To bees that gather honey, He drives his team across the field

Where skies are soft and sunny. The blackbird clucks behind the plough, The quail pipes loud and clear; You orchard hides behind its bough The home he loves so dear ; The gray and old barn doors unfold His ample store in measure, More rich than heaps of hoarded gold,-A precious, blessed treasure; While yonder, in the porch, there stands His wife, the lovely charmer, The sweetest rose on all his lands,-The Independent Farmer.

To him the Spring comes dancingly, To him the Summer blushes, The Autumn smiles with mellow ray, His sleep old Winter bushes; He cares not how the world may move, No doubts or fears confound him; His little flock are linked in love, And household angels round him He trusts to God and loves his wife, Nor griefs nor ills may harm her; He's Nature's nobleman in life,-The Independent Farmer.

But papa grew more cross and ugly, and staid away from home more. At last we had to move out of our beautiful house, and live in a miserable place, with about a dozen other families. Then our darling Baby May took sick and died. It seemed then as it mamma would die too, and I believe she would if pa. pa hadn't been more kind, and staid at home, away from those awful men who made him drink. He be- 1 Mar. 17 gan to love us again, and worked steady until he had money enough to buy this little hut, and mamma began to grow happy again; but those awful men led him off again, and now he is worse than ever. He beats mamma, and is as ugly as can be to Katie and me. I don't care for myself, but I can't stand it to see them knocked around. Do you wonder now, Nat, that I hate my father? Don't tell anybody what I've teld you, for it would break poor Katie's heart to hear me talk so; but I could'n help it.'

'Well, Tommy,' replied Nat, 'I do feel real sorry for you; but I don't know how I can help you, unless it is to as'a your father to sign the temperance pledge-that is what saved my father, and he used to be as bad as yours. We were never rich like you was, Tommy, and I never had a little baby sister, but I had a lovely sister Alice, who was a great deal older than I am, and she was papa's idol. No matter how cross and ugly he was to any one else, he never spoke cross to Alice, until one day, he had been gambling, and lost every cent he had, and came in the house and asked Alice to lend him some. She sewed on shirts, and earned nearly all the money we ever had then. She only had enough to pay the landlord, who she expected the next day, for his rent and would turn us all out of doors if it was not ready for him. She told father so, when he became so angry that he struck her such a heavy blow that it knocked her flat on the floor. Father picked her up and laid her on the bed, and in three days she died -our bright, beautiful Alice. But before she died, she got papa to sign the pledge, and made him promise to go to church every Sunday, and to be kind to mamma and me; and he has done it ever since. But he went almost crazy when he knew that Alice was dead. I was only a little fellow then, but I shall always remember how father looked when they screwed the coffin lid down, and he knew Alice had gone forever. He begged the man to let him have just one more look, and then he fainted dead away. But, mamma says, it was God's way of leading him from the drunkard's grave to a life of piety and usefulness; for father tries now to get everybody to sign the pledge, and tells those who refuse how he killed his darling daughter when he was a drunkard. I'll ask him to go and see your father, Tommy; perhaps he will get him to sign the pledge.'

'I wish you would, Nattie,' replied Tommy; 'but Never mind, Katie; he said you couldn't go, and I'm afraid that it will do but little good. But I'll there's no use crying about it any longer. I'm real | tell you what I have just been thinking, Nat, -we are sorry for you though, and I think that father is the only boys now, but we will soon grow to be men : ugliest man that ever lived.
