ALONE WITH GOD.

BY M. W. SPENCER. Alone with God-what better friend Could our wide wanderings attend, With ready hand and willing mind No other friend is half so kind.

Alone with God-whose piercing eye Looks through the secrets of the sky,-Who reads within what there is wrought In the deep germs of opening thought.

Alone with God-what joy to hear His gracious voice forever near, Distilled like heaven-descended dews, Shed on the soul each power renews Alone with God-whose hand each hour, Sustains and guards me by his power, O may his presence ever be My guide through blest eternity.

Advocate. anxiety for his recovery, insisted that he should take a little, just for a medicine, and at last he yielded. It seemed a small matter, but it was like opening a crevice in a bank against pent up waters. His slumbering appetite for brandy was so quickened by commencing again its daily use, that he nevermore was master of himself; yet his whole soul rebelled against slavery to Intemperance, and hence the bitterness of the cup of misery which he drank to the very dregs.

The drunkard who becomes such without compunction, may live stupidly on for years, but a constant struggle, such as was maintained by young S., soon wears out the life. He knew, and his friends knew, unless he again obtained control of himself, that he must speedily die. Yet, strange to tell, his father still kept before him the fatal

Sawyer loved most tenderly a beautiful, truehearted maiden, who loved him no less fervently in return, and her plighted troth to him was as the golden sunshine of heaven that brought summer to his soul. But when he found his resolutions of reform were of no avail, -that, notwithstanding all his efforts, the destroyer was gaining upon him, his generous nature recoiled from binding her to share his miserable destiny, and he released her from the engagement. Then, in the bitterness of his anguish, he cursed the day of his birth, and | . Well done,' from the lips of my King." prayed for death to free him from his wretched-

Mania a potu succeeded, and he felt himself pursued by unnumbered devils, and saw before him countless yawning graves, with an agony too fearful to contemplate. This could not last long, death overtook him, and here, in this rural nook, the birds sing as sweetly, and the summer winds kiss as gently the green turf above him, as though his brief life had not thus been crushed out in torture But will not his sorrowful history yet speak to many a father and mother and physician, and give point to the woe pronounced against him, who 'giveth his neighbor drink, to make him drunken?" Oh, how fearful, to have the blood of a victim. slain through our influence, cry from the ground to the God of heaven for vengeance. Yet are there not innumerable graves throughout our fair land, filled with the young, the noble and true, who have been led into temptation and placed in the power of the destroyer by the very friends whom God has delegated to them as protectors! The father of young S. had become so deadened by his own daily use of brandy, that he failed to see the cruel part he had acted in the drama, and received the stroke as an inscrutable decree of Providence. But the true-hearted mother looked on the frightful wreck of her noble boy with pangs of keenest remorse. She felt that his father, by stimulating an appetite for strong drink, had placed a dagger to his breast, which, in her blindness, her hand pressed cruelly to his vitals, and she would not be comforted, but went down brokenhearted to her grave beside him. The young woman whom he loved so fondly still lives, with a heart educated by suffering to feel for and comfort the afflicted. Her soul-crushing grief at first produced severe illness, and for a long time her life was despaired of, but she looked to God for strength to bear her great sorrow, and he gave it to her; and striving daily to do his will, and follow the example of Jesus in going about doing good, she waits with chastened spirit her summons among

SPARE MINUTES.

How much we can accomplish in them, if we only try. If the farmer, while he is waiting for his dinner to be "dished up," would nail on that loose paling to the garden gate, or do five minutes work on the door step which needs repairing or tack up the vine which the storm has beaten down, he will feel none the worse for it when he sits down to dinner, and yet the piece of work will give him satisfaction every time he thinks of it. More than this, the mended gate will keep the chickens from destroying the garden, thus saving him dollars of money and hours of time. The mended step may save some member of the household a heavy fall, and perhaps broken bones. It certainly will add much to the stock of happiness to feel that it is all sound and safe. The vine over the window gives is very different from the effect produced by a ragged, wind-beaten vine trailing in the path. How sadly these things are neglected about too many
