"BEHOLD I STAND AT THE DOOR AND KNOCK."

BY ARCHIBALD ALEXANDER STEVENSON.

There is a solemn question
To which I must reply;
Shall I accept the Saviour,
Or all His claims deny?
Behold He standeth knocking
Upon my bosom's door,
Perhaps if now He ceaseth,
'Twill be for evermore.
Oh, shall I now receive Him,
Accept Him and believe Him?
Or shall I now refuse to hear
And bid Him go away!

How long He hath been waiting,
My heart alone can tell;
How patiently entreating,
My conscience knoweth well.
What words of solemn warning,
What promises of love,
His voice hath ever pleaded
My stony heart to move.
Oh, shall I now receive Him, &c.

The question must be answered:
The time will soon be past:
It will not do to-morrow,
To day may be my last.
I either must reject Him,
And choose the world of sin,
Or open freely to Him
And bid Him enter in.
Oh, shall I now receive Him, &c.

Oh! on that awful morning,
When He, upon His throne,
Shall summon all before Him,
Who life on earth have known;
How shall I stand before Him
And look upon His face,
It, while He here entreateth,
I scorn His offered grace.
Oh, shall I now receive Him,
Accept Him and believe Him?
Or shall I now refuse to hear
And bid Him go away!

Miscellaneous.

THE LITTLE WANDERER.

'What are you doing here, my little vagabond? Begone quickly and never let me catch you here again, unless you want to be sent to prison with your miserable father,' said a tall well dressed boy to a ragged, hungry looking urchin, who, during a heavy shower, had taken refuge in his father's barn, 'Hurry out, or I will help you,' he continued; and suiting action to word, he took hold of the poor, trembling child, and ruddely pushed him out of the door.

'Well, cousin Fred, if that's the way you practice what you preach, I think that you had better write another essay on the 'Pleasure of Doing Good,' said a handsome, roguish looking girl about his own age who, unobserved by him, had entered the barn and witnessed his rude behaviour to the child. 'I am thinking, Sir Frederick, that you'll not entertain many angels unawares, if that's the way you treat strangers. But since you refuse to act the part of the good Samaritan, I will leave you to your own reflections, and, if possible, do something myself to comfort the child.'

'Cousin Grace,' replied Fred, 'I would advise you to have nothing to do with that boy; he is utterly unworthy of your sympathy. I know all about his whole family. It was his father who was sent to prison last week for stealing.'

'Well, must the poor child's teeth be set on edge because his father has eaten sour grapes?' replied his cousin. 'I'm ashamed of you Fred, I really thought you had more humanity, if not Christianity, about you than that.'

So saying, she left the place and hastened after the poor child, who was sitting under a tree at a little distance, weeping bitterly.

'What's the matter, little boy—did he hurt you?' inquired Grace, as she approached the spot. 'Come, tell me what troubles you, and perhaps I can help you. Did you ever hear about Jesus, who loves little children, and invites them to come to him?'

'Yes, ma'am,' replied the boy, smiling through his tears. 'Jesus is my only friend; I have no one to love me but him. But I am very hungry and tired, and I was beginning to think that Jesus had left me, too, for I have had nothing to eat to-day, and he has promised me my daily bread.'

'Poor child!' said Grace, with tears in her own eyes. 'Your faith has been severely tried, but Jesus has sent me to relieve you. Come right into the house, and I will give you a nice bowl of bread and milk.'

The boy arose, and trembling followed Grace to the kitchen, where his wants for that time were bountifully supplied. When he had finished his meal Grace asked where he was going, and whether it was his father who was sent to prison the week before.

'No, ma'am,' replied the boy; 'it was the man I lived with. My own papa is dead; he was killed by the Sepoy soldiers in India, at the time of the great rebellion. I don't know whether my mamma is dead or not, for they took me away from her on that dreadful day, and I have never seen her since.'

'What dreadful day, little boy?' asked Grace, much excited. 'Tell me what you mean.'

'I mean the time of the rebellion. I was only a little boy then, but I remember all about it. How anxious papa looked when he came home one night, and said to mamma that he was afraid that there was a terrible time brewing among the native soldiers. And the next morning he kissed mamma and my sister, and his little Bertie, as he called me, and said he might never see us again. Oh! how mamma cried and begged him not to go; but he said that he must stay with his regiment. So he bid us all good-by, and went away, and we never saw him again; for in a little while a gentleman called, and told mamma that the soldiers had killed all their officers, and my papa among the rest; and that she must hurry and go away up the mountain, for the soldiers were coming to burn our house down and perhaps kill us. So mamma packed up some clothes, and took all her rupees and sewed them up in a sack she wore; but just as we were getting into the palanquin, we heard a great noise, and a band of native soldiers came rushing up to us, and dragged me out. Mamma screamed and caught hold of me, but a soldier raised his sword, and told her that he would kill me on the spot if she didn't let go of me. Then he ordered the Coolies to move on with the palanquin, and I never saw poor mamma or my sister again. They said they were going to kill me, but my old nurse got me away from them and hid me, and kept me for a long time. Then she took me to a gentleman who said he was going to America, and knew mamma's friends; and said if he could find them, he would take me to them, but if not, he would put me in the orphan asylum, where I would be taught to read and write. And so he did; and I liked it there, although it was not near so nice as it was in papa's house in India. I had only learned to read a little, when the man who has been sent to prison came and took me out, and tried to make me steal, and used to beat me, because I I would not; but I have no home now.'

'What did you say your name was little boy?' eagerly inquired Grace; 'for I believe you are my own little brother.'

'Bertie, or Herbert Mitchell; but the man I lived with called me Tom.'

At the sound of the name Grace jumped up and threw her arms around the boy, exclaiming:

'Bertie, Bertie! my long lost, my darling brother!' Do you know me, Bertie? Come right up stairs to mother; she has grieved herself almost to death for her lost Bertie. Mother, mother!' she cried, as she sprang up the stairs, 'do come here, for our lost Bertie has come back to us.'

Her mother, scarcely comprehending what she said rushed to the door.

'What did you say, my daughter?' she asked. But as her eyes fell on the child Grace held by the hand, she shrieked, 'Bertie!' and fell fainting to the floor.

The proper restoratives being applied she soon recovered her consciousness, and great was her joy to behold once more her long lost boy, for such Bertie proved to be. The poor child had suffered much since he was so rudely separated from his mother six years before, but not more than his mother, who had spent years of fruitless search for him, and had begun to yield all hope of seeing him again, and had now come to reside with her sister. But now the long years of trial were past, and their Heavenly Father, who had been so faithfully watching over both, had had brought them together again. And Bertie never had reason again to say he had no home; and nowhere was there to be found a happier family than gathered that night around the family altar.

But Fred confessed that he was never more thoroughly ashamed of himself in all his life before, and tried in every way to atone for his unkindness to the little angel, as Grace called Bertie, that she entertained unawares.

MY FATHER DOES NOT WISH ME TO PLAY CARDS.

Noble answer, prophetic of a noble career.

Five boys, pupils in the boarding-school, were in the room. Four of them, contrary to the express rules, engaged in a game of cards. The fifth was not standing and looking on to see how the game would go, but engaged in some work of his own. One of the players was called out.

'Come,' said the others to their companion; 'it is too bad to have the game stop in the middle. Come and take his place.'

'I do not know one card from another.'

'That makes no difference. We will teach you. Come. Do not let our sport be spoiled.'

The boy perceived that this was the decisive moment. Ah, just such are the critical points, sometimes the turning points of life. His resolution was instantly taken. He made no more excuses, but at once planted himself square upon principle.

'My father does not wish me to play cards, and I shall not act contrary to his wishes.'

This ended the matter. It did more. It established his position among his companions. It compelled their respect, and preserved him from temptation for the future.

Such a boy inspires confidence. The incident may seem small in itself, but it gives promise of the future better than thousands of gold. Three sterling qualities are manifested: a conscientious regard to the wishes of parents, superiority to the fear of the ridicule of his companions, and decision. These qualities form a shield and a buckler in regard to all temptation. Happy the boy who possesses them. You would expect that his career would be honorable and successful.

Years have passed. That boy has become a man. Various and trying have been the scenes through which he has been called. Severe have been the temptations to which he has been exposed. But he has come forth as gold. No parent weeps, no friend blushes for him.

As parents we may not only teach our children, but teach in hope. Implant truth in the heart. Incessantly impress correct principles. By and by the fruit will appear, and perhaps at that very critical moment on which his life may hinge. Happy that parent whose wise and affectionate counsels keep the steps of his child from sliding.

Are you a son, rich in youth, rich in hope, rich in a good conscience? Always regard the wishes of your parents. Say to the tempter, 'Away, away! I know that bitter shame, sorrow, remorse, await those who yield to thy deceitful voice. I will stand steadfast, that I may find peace, joy, honor, eternal life.'—Am. Messenger.

LAND AHEAD.

Land ahead! Its fruits are waving
O'er the hills of fadeless green;
And the living waters laving
There, where heavenly forms are seen.
CHORUS,—Rocks and storms we'll fear no more,
When on that eternal shore;
Drop the anchor, furl the sail;
I'm safe within the vail.

Onward! bark, the cape I'm rounding;
See, the blessed waive their hands!
Hear the harps of God resounding,
From the bright, immortal land!
CHORUS.—Rocks and storms, &c.

There! let go the anchor, riding
On this calm and silvery bay;
Leeward fast the tide is gliding;
Shore and sun-light stretch away!
CHORUS.—Rocks and storms, &c.

Now we're safe from all temptation;
All the storms of life are past!
Praise the Rock of our salvation,
We're safe at home at last!
CHORUS.—Rocks and storms, &c.

FIVE HUNDRED MILES TO SEE JESUS.

'It was a long distance to go, all the way form Persia, to see Jesus. Was it not, Harry?'

'Yes, a long way. How far do you suppose it was, teacher?'

'It must have been five hundred miles. Do you think many would take so long a journey now to see Jesus? Would you?'

'O yes, indeed, if I knew Jesus was away out West, I'm sure I'd go to see him.'

'So would I,' said Herbert.

'And I, and I,' said George and James.

'What do you say, John?'

'I think I would go very gladly if Jesus was there, and would be glad to see me.'

'So you all think you would go as far as the wise men to see Jesus. But would you go in the daytime, or would you be ashamed to be seen going to him, and so go at night?'

'Indeed, we should not be ashamed.'

'Harry, how far off is Jesus?'

'I don't know; in heaven, isn't he?'

'He is not far off. He is nigh to all them that call upon him. He is at your heart's door. Hark, and you can hear him knocking, asking to come in. Will you admit him? If you would go five hundred miles to see Jesus, you will surely admit him when he is here. You are not ashamed to go five hundred miles to see him. Are you ashamed to take him into your hearts?'—Sunday School Times.

EIGHT REASONS FOR INSURING YOUR LIFE IN THE STAR LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—1. Because it has been established for twenty-six years, a period which is a sufficient test of its stability.

2. Because it has on its Board gentlemen who are known never to lend their influence to an undertaking which is not conducted with the greatest integrity.

3. Because it refers to gentlemen of the greatest eminence in every country, who are ready to vouch for its high position.

4. Because it has put by a large Reserve Fund, $5,000,000, which of itself is more than enough to meet every contingeucy.

5. Because the Bonuses which have been declared, notwithstanding so large a sum has been put by in reserve, are larger than many offices of similar condition.

6. Because its annual income has hitherto been more than three times the amount of claims which are annually provided for.

7. Because it gives Assurers in addition all those advantages which are made the especial features of other offices.

8. Because it has deposited with the Receiver General $100,000 as a guarantee to Canadian Policy-holders, that all claims will be met with promptitude, and in good faith.
