ALONE WITH THEE.

[Suggested by a passage in a friend's letter. "I feel it a precious thing to be alone with Jesus."] Alone with thee, O God, alone with thee, Who all my thoughts can see,

The evil and the good,
A varied multitude,
All, all exposed, no covert where to flee
From them, who shall appear,
Or gracious or severe,
Judge of those who slight thee or regard.
Who test in thy book whom thou'lt reward:

Alone with thee, O God, alone with thee,
Who all my faults can see;
These whose awakened ire
Is a consuming fire,
Whose pure eyes look not on iniquity;
Whose judgments, dread and sure,
Eternally endure.

Fain 'mong crowds the guilty seek to fly
From the strict watch of thine all seeing eye;
How fearful, then, to be
Alone with thee!

Alone with thee, O God, alone with thee,
Who all my griefs can see;
Thee, most compassionate,
Whose love to small and great,
Like a full fountain, ever flows free;
Whose mercy beamed forth when,
Incarcinate among men,
Thou healest disease, and driest the mourner's tears.

Alone with thee, O God, alone with thee,
Who all my wants can see;
With thee, the great High Priest,
Beside the Father placed,
Who for thy weak ones pleadst continually;
Who, tempted as we are,
(But with no sin to mar
The bright perfection of thy character.)
Feeldest for us the sympathy so dear;
O then how sweet to be
Alone with thee!

Alone with thee, O God, alone with thee,
Who all my aims can see;
Who by thy Spirit ever,
Will help each true endeavour,
E'en as a parent helps upon his knee
His feeble, struggling child,
Thy mercy, strong and mild,
Will aid the efforts of the soul to raise
Itself to thy commands, and trust thy ways:
O then how bliss to be
Alone with thee!

Miscellaneous.

WARREN BELL'S LESSON.

Few reflections are more bitter than those which come to a heart not destitute of feeling, after an unkind word to a loving parent. "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." Was I sure to come to him who disregards God's holy commandment.

It is common to meet with those who, while acknowledging, perhaps, to their own hearts, the love they bear their parents, outwardly treat them with indifference, or open disrespect. This is often the case with young men who are forming improper associations. An idea seems to prevail with them that a show of affection is girlish, effeminate. This is a great mistake, and one which causes much grief. In illustration, I recall a reminiscence.

A number of years since, I lived in a pretty country village, so lovely and quiet as to cause wonder that anything like grief or unkindness could thrive there. Among my companions was one named Warren Bell, an untidy, mischievous, but a general favorite. He was, at the time of which I write, about seventeen years old. I know now that he dearly loved his widowed mother, but a stranger would scarcely have thought so, judging from his manner towards her. The widow loved her only son as none but a mother can. She was gentle and kind to him, and was a good Christian woman. But to Warren, her tears and counsels, and exhortations, as she saw him slowly drifting astray, were distasteful, and he did not mind telling her so. As to consulting her wishes in anything, or obeying any command of hers that did not coincide with his feelings, he seemingly never dreamed of such a thing.

For several days I had noticed, in my visits that Warren had premeditated coolness, which often became downright disrespect, towards his mother, on account of her rebuke for some misdemeanor. He probably thought he was old enough to be his own master, and did not reflect that such conduct proved the contrary. It was winter; the pond was in prime order for skating, and I called for Warren to join me in the pleasure.

Mrs. Bell was about leaving home for a short time, to visit a sister, who was lying ill, leaving the house in charge of Warren. When I came in, she was saying, in a cheerful way, but with a heavy heart, I know—

"Warren, Warren; don't be so unkind. I will not see you for several days, perhaps."

"The better luck," answered the undutiful son, taking down his skates; "I will have a little quiet till you come back."

The wound was deep, but with a mother's love she hid it; and as we were ready to start, she said: "Good by, Warren; and make a motion as if to kiss him."

He looked at her as if surprised, then said, "Don't be silly, mother. Do you take me for a baby?"

It was some more than common yearning for her boy's love, perhaps, that urged her to say, with tears in her eyes.

"You not kiss your mother good-by, Warren?"

Warren was fixing in a strap. When he had finished he said, "Come, Hal, let's be off," and he moved towards the door.

"You might never see me again, Warren," said the widow in sadness.

"That," said Warren, working himself into impatience, "would be too good to be true; and pushing me out, he slammed the door after him."

As I passed the window I glanced in. I shall never forget the drooping figure, and sad look of the poor mother. Warren saw it, too, and hurried away. That these words of his were unkind, need scarcely be said.

"Shame on you," I said. "Go back and tell her you didn't mean that."

He looked troubled, but too proud to reply, he strode on in silence.

ing in vain to execute some of his pet movements, he seemed to lose all interest in the sport.

"What has come over Warren?" was asked by his friends. How could I answer them?

"I say, I shall stop; I don't feel well."

"I shall stop, if you do," I answered; and in an instant the skates were off, and we turned towards the village. There was silence for a time, but at last he said:

"I wonder if mother has gone."

"No doubt of that. The express started half an hour ago."

"Do you know, Hal, I didn't mean just what I said—you know when she spoke, when she said I might not see her again?"

"You should not have left her so. Why didn't you go back and tell her you spoke hastily?"

"I wish I had. But it's all over now. I will make it right when she comes back."

We had reached the gate. "Won't you come in?" he said. "Good night, then."

As I exchanged 'good night' with him, I held his hand for a moment, with a feeling of pity for him. I saw that even now he was feeling unhappy by the words he had so lately spoken to his mother.

An hour later I was told that some one was at the door to see me, but wouldn't come in. Wondering who it could be, I repaired to the door. It proved to be a school-mate, pale with excitement.

"Have you heard the news?" he exclaimed, as he saw me. "There has been an accident to the afternoon express, and Mrs. Bell is among the killed!"

I caught my breath, the horror of the last meeting of mother and son being fresh in my mind.

"Mrs. Bell! Are you sure there is no mistake?"

"It is true," and Colonel James and Robert Renshaw, and a number of others from S—.

The reason I came to tell you about it, they are about to bring the bodies in; and they want you to break the news to Warren, and he is so intimate. There he is at the gate, now. What if he should hear it while you hesitate. Be quick."

"No, no; I cannot!"

"You must; so go. I must hurry to the station."

He hurried off, and, my mind all in a strange whirl, I walked over to my friend. As I stood beside him, I could not realize the dreadful truth that he was motherless.

"Come in, Hal," he said, cordially. "I am glad you came over. I am very lonely, and I declare," he continued, smiling, "it seems to me the people must think so, too. They look and speak so kindly as they pass."

How should I tell him that it was pity for him as an orphan that made their words so kind and gentle? He gave me the news? I ventured, in a kind of desperation.

"News! what news?"

"About the railroad accident, this afternoon."

"They are growing common, now," he answered, with a strange light in his eyes, as if he were thinking of the possibility of accident to one in whom he had interest.

"That does not make the loss of life less fearful."

"Were there no such killed?" he inquired, innocently.

"What train did your mother take, Warren?" I asked, after a pause, trying to make my eyes speak an inkling of the truth.

He knew all, then, for he grew very pale.

"You know, as well as I do," he exclaimed, hoarsely, "that it was the late express."

"That train was wrecked," I said, and would have continued, but he fell at my feet. He looked up imploringly:

"Don't, please don't tell me that—that mother is dead!"

"What a face it was that was lifted to mine, pointed with an intensity of unbelief, horror, and grief! Alas, he read confirmation in my downcast eyes and my tears. Then he broke out passionately:

"A few hours ago, she begged me to kiss her, and I refused! A few hours ago, I told her it would be too good to be true! Oh mother, mother, shall I never be able to hear you say I am forgiven?"

When his mother's remains were brought to the house, he became almost wild in his remorse and grief, accusing himself in the most violent manner.

Those were only a few words that caused this grief, but who can weigh the pain they had caused to a loving mother's heart, as well as the remorse entailed for a lifetime on the careless son? It was a fearful lesson to Warren Bell. He would have given his life if he could have had his mother back again, just long enough to put his arms about her neck, and say, "Mother, forgive my cruel words; for I do love you."

As I saw him standing by his mother's open grave and noticed his pale face and his eyes sunken with weeping, and saw the quivering lips and gasping sobs which he still vainly tried to check, as he looked at the cold and still form of his mother for the last time, I thought of his words to me, "Too good to be true," and would not, were it possible have changed places with him for the world.—National Baptist.

LESSON FROM A CHILD.—I remember hearing of a little girl who went to her Sabbath school, and when she came home, her mother asked her what she had done at school and she in the simplicity of her little soul said, "Oh, dear mother, I am afraid I have done nothing; for you know there was little Mary Curtis, whose baby brother was buried this week, and she was so sorry, and she cried so that I cried with her, and I took her hands in mine and kissed her, but it quite took all the lessons out of my head—and poor Sarah Miles, who is always behind with her lessons had this morning quite perfect; and she was so happy that although she got more tickets than I did, I was quite glad, and I told her so, and kissed her, too." "My dear," said the happy mother, "you have not said so many lessons, perhaps, but you have fulfilled the Apostle's injunction; you have wept with those that wept, and rejoiced with those that rejoiced."

SCRIPTURE A DEFENSE.—A colporteur in North Africa writes as follows:—"Whilst I was distributing a Zouave came up to me, and, shaking hands, said, 'You do not know me, but I know you, for you saved my life, or at least, my limbs.' 'I saved your life and pray how?' 'Five years ago you gave me a New Testament. Its contents so touched me that I never parted with it, and for fear of losing it, I put it in my trunk's pocket. In the course of a while it was struck by a ball, which went through the New Testament, but I was saved.' The Zouave showed me the New Testament, from which he had not extracted the ball. I asked him to let me have it, but he declared that he would never part with it. So the word of God is to be one of our chief weapons of defence when assailed by the tempter."

A Sunday school man of Wisconsin, of small means and a large family to support by the labor of his own right hand, has lately given a month's time, bearing his own expenses, to holding conventions and institutes. Others to whom the Lord has given heart to work and ability to instruct have done likewise.

General Superintendent for Maritime Provinces.—CHAS. LEMAN, Halifax, N. S.
Sole Agent for New Brunswick.—CHAS. S. LUGRIN, Fredericton.

EIGHT REASONS FOR INSURING YOUR LIFE IN THE STAR LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—1. Because it has been established for over 50 years, it is a permanent and a sufficient test of its stability.
2. Because it has on its Board gentlemen who are known never to lend their names to an undertaking which is not conducted with the greatest integrity.
3. Because it refers to gentlemen of the greatest eminence in every country, and whose decisions are final.
4. Because it has put by a large Reserve Fund, $5,000,000, of which it has more than enough to meet its obligations.
5. Because the Bonuses which have been declared, notwithstanding the fact that the company has been in operation for more than 50 years, are larger than any other of similar condition.
6. Because its annual income has hitherto been more than twice the amount of claims which are annually provided for.
7. Because it gives Assurers in addition to all other advantages, which are made the special terms of other offices.
8. Because it has deposited with the Receiver General $100,000 as a guarantee to Canadian Policy-holders, that all claims will be met with promptitude and in good time.
