I pray thee, Lord, she said, That Thou wilt condescend To tarry in my heart, And ever be my friend, The path of life is dark, I would not go astray; O, let me have Thy hand

To lead me in the way. "Fear not, I will not leave thee, child, alone." She thought she felt a soft hand press her own. They tell me, Lord, that all

The living pass away;

The aged soon must die, And even children may. O, let my parents live Till I a woman grow; For if they die, what can A little orphan do? "Fear not, my child, whatever ills may come, I'll not forsake thee, and I'll bring thee home."

Her little prayer was said, And from her chamber now, Forth passed she with the light Of heaven upon her brow. Mother, I've seen the Lord, His hand in mine I felt; And O! I heard Him say,

As by my chair I knelt-"Fear not, my child, whatever ill may come, I'll not forsake thee till I bring thee home."

TRUST YOUR CHILDREN.

BY MRS. H. W. BEECHER.

There is no lesson that so well repays the teacher as that by which children are taught to feel that they are trusted-that father and mother commit matters of importance to their care, with confidence that they will not disappoint them. Begin this teaching while the child is yet young. Of course, you must guage the importance of the trust by the age of the child, taking care that you do not tax the little one beyond its capacity, but being just as careful to have it understand that you are in earnest It is a great event in a child's life when it first feels that you look to it with loving confidence for the performance of certain duties-that you have trusted to its honor; and that feeling of responsibility which comes with this knowledge wakes up self-respect, and the care and faithfulness which the youngest sees must be necessary to the satisfactory execution of the work will be good seed sown, that in after years will bear fruit, amply repaying all the trouble it cost to prepare the soil for its reception. That such teaching is not the most easy duty one can accept, every mother knows full well, and would much rather do the Haven't you any body to love you?" work herself, if conscience permitted, than be subjected to the tediousness and annoyance of drilling a child to do it. But this is a mother's mission which it is not wise to delegate to another.

When a child has been repeatedly shown precisely how to do certain things, begin to leave these little "chores" for it to do alone when you are not near. Let it be something trivial at first, of course. Say to the little two-year old, "Mamma must go out for a little while. I am sorry to leave the nursery in disorder; but Eddie is such a helpful little man, he will put all the blocks and ' Noah's Ark' up, just as I like to see them; and little Kitty, too, knows I wish her to fold the doll's clothes and lay them in the drawer, when her play is over; I am sure this room will look very nice when I return."

If this kindly training is begun early, do you not know how proud and happy these miniature men and women will feel when this work is entrusted to their care—a token of mother's confidence in their ability? Of course, it may be necessary to be a little short-sighted when you return, and pass over for the time some few items that will bear improvement; but let these wait. Appear pleased-be pleased-with their efforts; give as much sweet praise as is judicious, to gladden their little hearts. It will be time enough when the next trial is made, to say, "I think I would fold this little dress;" or, "Put those books here." Gentle hints, interspersed with all possible approval, will fix the lesson, so that you can soon feel safe to put the play room almost wholly in the care of quite young children, except the sweeping or work beyond their strength. But their lesson, as we said before, must begin early, else the child will learn to prefer being waited upon to doing the work itself.

As your child can bear it, add, year by year, to the trust and responsibility. Accept the labor as a love-offering to save your time and strength, and it will not be long before willing hands and happy hearts will really lighten your labors, and save you many weary steps, while at the same time they are learning a lesson that will do them good through life. Vary the teaching by sending the child, by and-by, out to do a little shopping-some small thing, but such as will call for the exercise of taste and a little judgment; nothing of much importance, so that, should there chance to be a slight mistake, no great harm will follow; yet so much that the child, by thus learning to judge and discriminate in small things, will be preparing for greater ones. An expedition of this kind stands out among the | It was a sad sight-a poor foolish drunkard stagbrightest of our childhood memories. Now Johnnie was a generous-hearted, rollicking Here was a dilemma! The purchases must be made, little boy, and who knows what fearful temptations the patient must be cared for. What was to be he may yet have to withstand? But my little done? Indeed, it is a very good that we could not help hearing the consultation. thing, and we all loved Johnnie a thousand-fold Father must go to his patient-but who was to go more for his kind-heartedness; but if he does not for the articles so greatly needed? That would never do, for "the at last drink. Oh, how it would grieve me to boys" must soon return to school, and their clothes see my little friend looking like that. Be very 52 GERMAIN STREET, . ST. JOHN, N.

heard the hurried talk with a kind of dreamy wonder as to how they would settle the troublesome question; but, as one who could have no personal interest in the solution, went on with our frolic with baby, when mother said:

"Write out a list with full directious, and send

What a bound our heart gave! We nearly dropped the baby. We-not twelve years old-and mother thought we could be trusted to do such a big thing! We felt a half-head taller only to think that mother, bless her, thought us capable of it. Whether it was decided that we should go or not was, just then, quite a secondary consideration, yet we were "all ears" to catch father's reply:

"Send that child! What does she know of buying anything? and this is a very important errand." Ah! here our heart collapsed; we didn't quite want to go-the work seemed so great-but we did want father to think us trustworthy and capable, as mother did.

"If you think it safe for her to drive alone so far, I think you may trust her to do the errand well, with suitable directions. The merchants and grocers are old friends, and will not take advantage of the child."

"Well, it is the only thing we can do," said father, with an anxious, dissatisfied tone; and this great responsibility was committed to our care. How much we thought in that long twelve miles' ride to the town! What anxious thoughts on the return ride, fearing that we had forgotten something, or made some ill-advised purchase; but under it all there was a dull pain to remember that father didn't quite trust us, which did not leave us until, safe at home, all the purchases laid out and examined, he drew us to his knee, close by mother's sick bed, and kissed us, with "well done, my brave girl! Hasn't she done well, mother?"

How much good that day's work did us, giving us courage when duties seemed too hard for us, we can never estimate; but the most precious of all was our mother's trust and father's approbation. It is only by love and gentleness that a child can be taught to find real enjoyment in later or important cares. Exact it as a duty, sternly command, watch, with constant suspicion and fault-finding, and labor is drudgery, and cares of any kind a terror to the young. The child either becomes stubborn, or, if timid and loving, is so nervously fearful of being blamed, that this very fear ensures the dreaded results. Ah! if young mothers could know how many hours of self-reproach the grandmothers pass as they look to the time when their little ones were around them, and see, too late, how many mistakes they made, simply by their own impatienence, overstrictness, and want of confidence in their children's good intention and desire to do right, it might | Money Received on Deposit at 6 per cent. save them from much regret, and their children from many temptations. But each one must have experience of their own. When young, we seldom are ready to profit by the experiences of the old, or think them of much more importance than "old wives' fables," but when, after many mistakes, we arrive at middle age, we are able to estimate their alue. - Christian Union.

DON'T DISOBEY YOUR PARENTS.—Never we beg of you. You will promise not to, when you read this. May you never have to shed such tears as these—tears in which there is no consolation:—

Let me tell you the words of an old man, showing how long the thorn of disobedience may pierce part of our Fall Stock of Gold Jewelery. the heart. An old man was once seen sitting on the banks of a stream, weeping. A little boy, running along, asked him, "What makes you cry?

"O, yes," he answered; "but let me tell you how | pected-300 brls. large fat Canso Herring. these waters tell me of a great sin I once committed. When a boy, I had a young sister, Ellie; my sick mother gave her in my care and warned me never to take her near the river's brink. Mother was sick a long while. Not heeding her words, I went, one day, with sister Ellie, to the river. I forgot little Ellie, and let her stray along the stream, until I heard her wild scream, O, help me! brother, help!" but I was too late. I drew near the fatal spot, only to see her raised hand sinking in the river out of

"I ran home, screaming, 'Ellie is drowned.' "Mother heard my shrieks. The sudden fright killed her; and mother and sister were placed in the same coffin, and sunk in the same grave-the sad fruits of my disobedience."
