WILL THE SHEPHERD COME?

A dying girl had the 23rd Psalm read to her, after which she said to her friends, "Is the Shepherd coming for me? Will the Shepherd come to fetch me?"

I shall know the gentle Shepherd

When He stands beside the bed;

When I hear Him in the darkness

I shall soon be comforted.

He has led me many a journey,

He has brightened every place;

Now I long to see His face,

And I care not for the shadows

That may be in the valley he;

If the Shepherd come to fetch me,

Is He coming soon for me?

Is it near the twilight, mother?

Are the children at their play

In the street, beneath the window,

While the daylight fades away?

Oh, I wish it would grow later,

And the world would go to sleep!

Then perhaps the tender Shepherd

Would come seeking weary sheep,

When the silence had been silvered

By the soft light of the room,

Will the Shepherd come to fetch me?

Is He coming for me soon?

But I have so often wandered

From His side and from the fold;

And I would not listen to Him,

Gave Him not my hand to hold.

Yet the Shepherd is so patient,

And His love must be so great,

For He will give His life to save us:

He will come, though He is late,

And He should come to-morrow,

What a happy day 'twould be!

And the Shepherd knows I'm waiting,

So He soon will come for me.

He is coming; mother, listen—

Can you hear the Shepherd's voice?

I have heard it, and I love it,

For it makes my heart rejoice.

He is leading me through waters,

But the waves are very still,

And He points me through the shadows

To the light upon the hill.

Surely goodness, love, and mercy

Follow me till I am home;

See, the Shepherd, Christ, has come.

"IF WE KNEW!"

BY MRS. HENRY WARD BEECHER.

In a recent number we copied a scrap of poetry with this insignificant title. It struck us very forcibly as containing a profitable lesson, and has haunted us daily, ever since.

We have been sitting this rich, golden afternoon on our veranda, all alone. Before us stand the grand old hills; on our right lies the beautiful Hudson. The air is laden with rich perfumes from a wilderness of flowers, but no wind disturbs the trees, or makes music in their branches. The bees are so busy with their provident store that their song is very low and gentle. The humming-bird darts in and out of the honeysuckle over our head, though, equally industrious, is more demonstrative in his wonderful activity.

The patient old mother turkey, "cluck, cluck," by which she calls her numerous brood about her, and her "peep, peep," in reply, the self-contented old gobbler, as he spreads his train and brushes the ground with his wings in faint imitation of far-off thunder, or his arrogant "yell, yell," in defiance of some imagined enemy; the roll of the carriage, and the swift glad music of the horses' feet on the smooth road, are almost the only sounds or signs of life we hear. The husband—household—the most significant word in the English language, is telling in the hot and dusty city; the children are all scattered: the grandchildren, mischievous, merry little rogues, are not as they should be, near grandma's chair; and the servants in the kitchen or laundry to-day, move as quietly as the wind in the tree top. It is still! We could hardly be more alone if we were on the highest peak of "Castle Hill," and, as we sit in this wonderful quiet these hours, "if we knew," are stirring our heart with a strange and unusual power.

Ah! if in early youth "we knew" if we could look along our way of life clear to the end, and see all the breakers and quicksands which, by patience and self-control we could have avoided, how different would be the view we now take of the "backward track" of life! No doubt, it is well in many ways that we cannot read the future; trials and sorrows that no foresight could have turned aside, would have been doubled by anticipation and foreknowledge, and yet—we doubt if there are many, who, looking from the "half-way house," would not willingly endure the double pain and sorrow, if they might have had the power to foresee the inevitable result of certain courses, and profiting by this foreknowledge, have avoided the danger of the sin.

Brother! Sister! Would you be patient or cross to your little playmate "if you knew" those little "baby fingers" would "never trouble you again?"

Two little boys were at play—one of three years, the other of eighteen months. Both wanted the rocking-chair. Full of health and animal spirits, their dispute ran high, and, at last, the elder struck the little one. Only a few days and the baby hands were folded in "snowy grave" upon the cold and quiet earth, and laid in the grave. A short time after, hearing bitter sobs in the garden, the mother found the lonely brother—himself but just past babyhood—lying under the peach tree, watching with eager eyes some birds flying over his head, and calling between his sobs, "Oh, birdies! little birdies! Fly up! fly higher! and tell Jesus Christ if he will only let God come back to me he may have the rocking chair all the time, and I never, never will strike him again—never! never!"

Oh! Father! Don't be harsh with your son. He disobeyed your commands, and of course he has done wrong; but he is only a little child. It was the overflow of exuberant life. If you could look forward to what soon may be, may be, how leniently would you judge—how gently would you chide; and, by your gentleness secure the obedience much more effectually.

Ah! poor, tired mother! You are very weary and half-sick. Your eyes are heavy with wear of sleep, and your head throbbing with the noise and shouts, and wild frolics of your little ones. But it is health, and strength, and life! Be patient! If soon, with hot and tearless eyes, you watch by the little crib where fever may conquer that life, but late so joyous and full of activity, can you endure what may be, if you have scattered "thorns, not roses, for your reaping by and by?"

I have asked you twenty times to mend this coat, and it is not done yet! "No time! How long would it have taken? But, well—I can go ragged I suppose. You take little heed to my wishes or advice. You must take your own way or you'll not be satisfied."

THE DANGEROUS COVE.

There is a little cove at Atlantic City, where the waters have washed out a deep hole in the sands at the bottom. Beyond is a long beach, against which the surf breaks. To look at the little sheet of water which lies between, you would think a child might wade across. This season a number of persons have made the attempt. But after a few feet they sink down into a deep pit which the waters have hollowed, as hopelessly lost as if they had fallen into a well. A warning was put over the spot, but there were foolishly people who would venture there still.

A lad went down with his two sisters to bathe, when a fancy seized him to cross this strip of water. "You had better not venture there," said a gentleman who was passing by; "if you go in, you will probably never come out again. A number of persons have been drowned in it this summer; just read the notice over your head."

Did the youth think the gentleman for his kindly warning? Did he turn away to the long beautiful beach, where he might bathe in safety? No; he turned scornfully from his kind adviser, and "reckoned he could take care of himself."

The gentleman passed on with his party; but five minutes later the poor boy sunk in the deep waters and his body could not be recovered until life was extinct.

This boy is not alone in his recklessness. Men and boys rush on with mad haste to the pool where there is a far more dangerous pit hidden. They see and hear of many others who have been drowned in it, but they will not take warning. The pit of intemperance swallows up thousands who go into it with eyes wide open, and with warnings sounding in their ears. When you first enter this fearful cove, the waters seem shallow and warm and pleasant, but just beyond, the awful pit yawns to engulf its victim; one step farther, and you are lost beyond hope. You cannot tell just when the fatal step will be taken; the only safety consists in staying out altogether.

I have one incident which has written its lesson indelibly upon my heart; at the age of a little over four years, one of my little girls was converted to God, and from that time she loved the Saviour and endeavored, with childlike simplicity, to follow His commands. A little after six years she was taken sick; she thought she was going to die; her experience was as bright and clear as the experience of a half-century. We could not give her up, we could not realize that death was among us, that so far a flower could fade so early. Yet she felt and realized it. Whilst watching her bedside, suddenly we heard a voice breaking out clear and distinct—

"There is a happy land far, far away."

And she sang through the verse, then turning to her mother said she wanted to see the Lord's Prayer, clasped her little hands, looked to heaven and died. Oh, what true Christian ever died more gloriously, or loved the Saviour more? Brethren, let us not be afraid of the conversion of the children; bring your influence to bear upon them everywhere, do not be satisfied and do not let their teachers have any quiet until you see the children in your Sunday-schools brought to Christ and enfolded in the Church.—Bishop Clark.

THEATRES AND DANCES.—In closing a Sabbath evening sermon on this subject, the Rev. Dr. T. I. Cuyler said: "And now I enter my strongest protest against the dances which are sanctioned among the fashionable circles of the day as being hurtful to womanly purity—yes, I repeat, hurtful to womanly purity. These dances pander to passions which bear people on in an irresistible manner to the commission of acts which could not fail to shock them in sober moments. They are immoral, for the delicate instincts are overcome by the excitement of the whirl, in which pure and vile are mixed till all distinctions are lost. If young women could but know how loose young men speak of them in connection with such affairs, they would never enter again the ball-room."

The Protestants of Paris established, a year ago, a daily prayer meeting in which every denomination is represented. More than twenty pastors have promised to aid in keeping up the meetings, which are well attended. Persons are appointed to stand at the doors to invite passers-by to enter; and 110 meetings have been arranged for each month.
