BEAUTIFUL CHILD.

Beautiful child by thy mother's knee, In the mystic future what wilt thou be? A demon of sin, or an angel sublime-A poison Upas, or innocent Thyme-A spirit of evil, flashing down With the lurid light of a fiery crown-Or gliding up with a shining track, Like the morning star that ne'er looks back; Daintiest dreamer that ever smiled, Which wilt thou be, my beautiful child ?

Beautiful child in my garden bowers, Friend of the butterflies, birds and flowers, Pure as the sparkling crystalline stream, Jewels of truth in thy fairy eyes beam; Was there ever a whiter soul than thine Worshipped by Love in a mortal shrine ? My heart thou hast gladdened for two sweet years With rainbows of Hope through mists of tears-Mists beyond which thy sunny smile With its halo of glory beams all the while.

Beautiful child, to thy look is given A gleam serene, not of earth, but of heaven; With thy tell-tale eyes and prattling tongue, Would thou couldst ever thus be young ; Like the liquid strain of the mocking bird, From stair to hall thy voice is heard; How oft in the garden nooks thou 'rt found With flowers thy curly head around ! And kneeling beside me with figure so quaint, Oh ! who would not dote on my infant saint ?

Beautiful child, what thy fate shall be Perchance is wisely hidden from me. A fallen star thou mays't leave my side, And of sorrow and shame become the bride-Shivering, quivering through the cold street, With a curse behind and before thy feet-Ashamed to live, and afraid to die, No home, no friend, and a pitiless sky; Merciful Father, my brain grows wild, Oh, keep from evil my beautiful child !

Beautiful child, mays't thou soar above, A warbling cherub of joy and love, A drop on Eternity's mighty sea, A blossom on Life's immortal treebag of marbles in his hands, he had made up his mind.

"Not for keeps," said he, when the game began. 'I wont play for keeps." "Oh, how mean !" cried the other boys. " He is afraid he will lose his marbles."

The second and an and the second s

"Tisn't that either," answered Martin, flushing up. "Grandpa says it is the same as gambling, and he dosen't think it is right; neither do I." "Oh, oh, Mart is setting up for a minister ! How was it about getting our marbles yesterday ? That was all right wasn't it ?" sneered the boys. "I didn't think anything about it, then," returned Martin, bravely. "Here they are; each boy can take back his own marbles. I don't want to keep them." Martin had had a very hard struggle in his boyish heart, before he could bring himself to say this; but he had asked the Lord to help him, and when one is sure the Lord is on his side, he can do anything.

But "the first stroke is half the battle," and it eemed making up his mind was harder than anything else.

The boys knew Martin was more likely to win than to lose marbles; and now he had so freely given up those he had already won, they could no longer say he was stingy or mean.

"Well, I don't care," said Jacques Simoneaux," "I had just as lief play not for keeps as anyway."

Boys are so much like sheep, that they all followed the one who started first. "I too," "I too," said they all. And there was no more " playing for keeps" on

FAITH ILLUSTRATED.

Willie was ill; he had been long so. The doctor had given him up for some months, and yet the lad said he felt not ill; only his cough was troublesome, and he was weak.

But we who had known him in earlier days, who were familiar with his childish prattle and his sunny face, observed a great change, when we saw him again after some months' absence; his face was very thin, and his hands almost transparent. The concentrated rosy tinge on the cheek, and the brightness of the eyes, evidenced incontestably the triumphant march of the disease. While we talked with his mother on that evening, he sat at his

PLAYING FOR KEEPS.

There was a large bunch on Martin's side, and when he ran, something chinked.

"Ah! I know!" said Dr. Gabriel, coming up behind him. "Somebody has a pocket full of marbles."

Martin looked up astonished. He thought his grandfather must be a conjurer.

"I know it," said he, "So I have. But I don't think you were there. I didn't see you."

"Where is there ?" asked Dr. Gabriel.

"Why, out on Miss Peachy's sidewalk, don't you know? That is the most hunkydory place on the street for marbles; for it is so smooth. And I had all the luck this morning," replied Martin, rattling his pocket, with an air of satisfaction. "We played for keeps, and I began with five and left off with thirty. See here! Isn't that pretty good ?" he continued, stopping and emptying his pocket on the sidewalk-

"Pretty good, pretty good, Master Martin," replied Dr. Gabriel, patting the boy on the head, "I dida't know I had so smart a grandson. But that is hardly as good as a man did on a Mississippi steamer one morning before breakfast.

"At marbles?" asked Martin, his little round face sparkling with interest.

"No-o-o, not marbles exactly. Same thing though. He was 'playing for keeps;' and what do you think, Martin? He began with a suit of old clothes and a dog, and he left off with a handsome house, a splendid carriage, and a pair of horses, three shares in a coal mine, and three thousand dollars in gold. Wasn't that pretty good ?" concluded Dr. Gabriel, in a triumphant tone.

"Why, granpa, he got it gambling, didn't he ?" returned Martin doubtfully.

"Well, yes! yes, you might call it gambling, I suppose. He used bits of pasteboard instead of marbles; that was all the difference; they amount to the same thing."

"Why, but grandpa, gambling is wicked. In was just the same as stealing the money and things away from the other man," persisted Martin, shocked at his grandfather's light tone.

"I suppose some people call it so. I dare say your father has some such opinion. He is a minister, and rather particular, you know. And, yes I suspect it was rather hard for the man's partner to lose all his property in one morning Made it a little bad for his wife and children. He had a very nice woman for a wife, as I heard, and several quite young children, beautiful children too. But followed a stillness as painful as death. The little then all the luck happened to be on the side of the sufferer lay with hands clasped, and his fair counother man, and I can't see, for my part, why it tenance radiated with the glory of an unseen wasn't just as fair and right as it is for one boy to presence. Once more he spokeget all the marbles. I suppose the other boy hates to lose his marbles, but the luck is against him, and he has to stand it."

mother's right hand at the table. He was at first somewhat excited with our visit, but soon regained his composure, and sat seemingly absorbed with a book, while we chatted of old times and scenes. The evening sped quickly on. A deep-drawn sigh from the child attracted the attention of the mother. "What is the matter child, are you worse?" "No, dear mother, I'm not worse, I am tired; I have been reading of a place 'where the wicked cease from troubling, and where the weary are at rest." I feel that I shall soon leave you mother, and I want to go there."

"I pray you will, my child ; Jesus is willing-He is waiting to receive you."

"Yes, mother, I have learned that He is at God's right hand to welcome us, and I long to go to Him."

"And leave me, child ?"

"Oh, mother; yes, for you will follow me, and it will not be long for you to wait; for the Bible says, a thousand years are but as a day in God's sight, and you will not live as long as that. Think of it, dear mother, I shall be already there to welcome you. I do love you, dear mother, and I feel it hard to say-'I want to go,' but I do.

"Why so, my child; you are not, you say worse?"

"I am not worse, mother, but I'm weary, and I feel I want just the rest Jesus can give. I want to loudest voice, 'Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Hosts.' I would like to do it now; but I'm so weak, I cannot sing at all."

"But, darling, it is a terrible thing to die.] hope you will live some time yet."

"I do not want to live, mother dear, and I'm not afraid to die. I dreamed last night a beautiful dream. I saw the heavens open and hundreds of angels come down to earth; they were as bright as the light, and with garments white as snow; each carrying his golden harp. Presently they stood in a circle around me, and sang the new song, and Confer Ease and Comfort on the Wearer, cause a continusilently and slowly they unfolded their wings, CHEAPEST, as well as the BEST. smiled upon me, and ascended to the sky. I tried to follow, and oh! I felt so sad when I found I could not. I shall follow soon, though, for I shall not live long. Let me go to bed, please, mother for I am tired." The sorrowing mother laid her little one to rest

-her only child-and watched him till he went to leep. And, although she loved her Saviour, she found it hard to give him up, even to her God, and her child's God.

Later we retired. At midnight we were sumnoned to the child's bedside. When we entered, he was singing with a clear voice— "O Lamb of God, thy precious blood > Shall never lose its power, Till all the ransomed church of God Be saved, to sin no more."

And then, when we stood around his bed, there

Martin walked the length of a whole block before he spoke again. Then he said :

"Grandpa, what became of the man that lost all his money and things ?"

"He felt so ashamed and dismal that he blew his brains out, and when his wife heard of it, she went crazy. The children had to be sent to the poor-The second second second house."

"Why, Grandpa Gabriel! What a dreadful thing ! Didn't the other man feel awfully ?" asked Martin, in horror.

"I don't know. Gamblers lose their feelings after a while, pretty much. I snppose he thought it was in the way of luck. But anyhow the money was a curse to him," said Dr. Gabriel. " God has so ordered the world, that we have to pay somehow They are the memories of home-only home, there for whatever we have, or get no good from it. This is the old tree under which the light-hearted boy property, coming so suddenly into the hands of a swung many a day; yonder is the river in which man who had not earned it, turned his head. He spent it all in less than a year, and died in a drunken in which brother and sister, long since laid in the fit."

Martin did not speak for a long time; then he shadowed by yon old church, whither with a said, in a tone full of awe :

"Do you think, grandpa, just playing marbles for keeps, makes a boy likely to do such things as school house, associated in youthful days with that ?"

step on the same road. A boy might not go the nature. There is where he learned to feel some of whole length of the road, but he would be a good his emotions. There, perchance, he first met the deal surer if he never started on it."

day long he kept thinking and thinking of what Dr. Gabriel had said; and the next morning when can find no appropriate place for their exercise he went out to Miss Peachy's sidewalk, with hi only at one's fireside .- Nation.

"Yes, dear Jesus, I come, for I am weary let me rest on Thee. I come.

"Lift your heads, ye golden gates, And let the little wanderer in."

Then all was still; a light shiver, and all was over. In a few days we laid him in the churchyard, and soon flowers bloomed on the grave; and our sadness was mellowed by the knowledge that one whom we loved had been transplanted to bloom in the Saviour's kingdom, where there is no mildew to blight, no east wind to wither, no sun to scorch, but where, in unfading beauty, he shall bloom forever. And our sorrow was turned into

HOME AFFECTION.

The heart has affections that never die. The rough rubs of the world never obliterate them. he learned to swim; there is the house in which he knew a parent's protection-nay there is the room yard in which we must soon be gathered, over-
