For the Religious Intelligencer "MINE HOPE HATH HE REMOVED LIKE I JoB xix. 10.

And like a tree it flourished, my fair hope Grown tall and strong, and greener than the rest 'Twas hard to see it perish ;--ah, my heart-Be patient, still! for God, He knoweth best,

Well I remember when I planted it With childish, trembling fingers set it there: So small, that surely none could envy me

What to mine own eyes scarcely seemed fair. Then leaves came, one by one, and making each A sweet surprise; and, in the May-time flowers,

Before my raptured sight in those spring hours. And it was grown so high, my green-hope tree; And many nests among its branches were:

My fancies carolled in the topmost leaves, My dreams and wishes brooded quiet there. Then the long summer waned; daily I looked Among the boughs for fruit, but all in vain, Naught had availed either smiles or tears, Fond hopes or loving wishes, sun or rain.

Perhaps because He knew its clinging roots strength,

Perhaps because He saw its thick'ning leaves Would shade the windows of my soul at length. He cut it down! my hope-my fair, green tree! And, at the blows, my heart all round it shook; And my eyes turned from the sad scene away,-The sight of desolation could not brook.

But pitiful sweet vines and mosses kind Covered with tenderness the stump so rude ; And scarlet lichens started up to hide The drops of my heart's blood which stained the

And I think, when the spring-time comes again, The' hanging blossoms never more I see,

May-flowers of Faith and Love may bloom for me.

His sister came yesterday and watched with him," answered the attendant nurse, glancing at the young girl who hung breathless over the sleeping invalid. "Ah! that explains it. I'm not certain but that young man has power enough left to recover, if he could have the care and tenderness for the next two months which love alone can furnish."

How Janet's heart leaped at the blessed words! That very morning she had an interview with her brother's employers. They had been careless, but not intentionally unkind, and the girl's story enlisted their sympathies.

In a day or two George was removed to a quiet, comfortable private home, and his sister installed SOLD BY APOTHECARIES. herself by his couch, his nurse and comforter.

Three years have passed away. Mrs. Clark sat in her chamber, humming a nursery tune, to which Which, all ungathered, bloomed and flushed and the cradle kept a sort of rythmic movement. "There's something for you, Mary. It came by express this afternoon."

"The lady removed the cover, with eyes filled with wonder, while her husband leaned over her factory known. Just opening at HANINGTON BROS shoulder and watched her movements.

A white box disclosed itself, and, removing the cover, Mrs. Clark descried a small, elegantly-chased hunting-watch. She lifted it with a cry of delighted surprise, and, touching the spring, the case flew Deep in my heart, sapped too much life and back, and on the inside were engraved these words: "To Mrs. Mary Clark. In token of the life she saved."

"Oh, Edward! It must have come from George and Janet Hill," exclaimed the lady. "You know she's been with him ever since that time; and she wrote me last spring that he had obtained an excellent situation as head clerk in the firm. What an exqusite gift, and how I shall value it, not simply for itself either?"

"Well, Mary, you were in the right then; though I'm sorry to say I was half vexed with you for giving up your mantle."

"I've not had one, but I've never regretted it." "Nor I, Mary, for I cannot doubt that your act of self-denial saved the young man's life."
