HUMBLE ASSURANCE. BY THOMAS D. JAMES.

To know that Thou lovest me! Lord can it be That though so unworthy, so prone to the dust, To thy bosom of tendernesss I too may fiee, And bury my fears and repose all my trust? May a creature so sinful, so faithless as I, So resisting my heart, so unyielding my will, Unto thy loving arms in full confidence fly, And know that Thou lovest me-lovest me still

To know that Thou lovest me! yes, to believe door:

And bade the poor mourner to sorrow no more!

So firmly to trust Thee, though fainting I lie; Though blessings are hid, and though every ill Seems darkened around, to believe thee still nigh, And know that thou lovest me-lovest me still!

To know that Thou lovest me! Praised be that love

That falls like dew 'mid the shadows of night; That glows like the sun from the heaven above; That clothes like the snow in a mantel of white! Yes, praised be that love that, so full and so free, The largest desire of my heart it can fill; So slowly descending it makes even me, To know that Thou lovest me-lovest me still !

To know that Thou lovest me! Saviour Divine, Let that love so unbounding shed gladness and peace;

Round all my heart's warmest affections entwine, And glowing and growing forever increase ! Let me breathe its sweet perfume with every breath ; Let its dews o'er the shades of my eventing distil; In the perils of life, in the travail of death, Let me know that thou lovest me-lovest me

LITTLE WORDS.

It is a true story. I'll say that to begin with, because I know almost all the boys and girls who woods awhile, so as to get home about the usual time. The eandy was all gone, and they didn't feel like play, and the time seemed long. But at last they went home.

And now conscience wouldn't keep quiet any | Flour. For sale at market rates by longer. I don't know how it was with Hatty; she was ten years old, and ought to have a conscience O ap 7 that could speak pretty loud; but I know Eddy didn't feel a bit happy. He had always been very fond of his father, following him about as he worked. But now he kept out of his way all he could. He didn't come to sit on his knee for a pleasant little talk before going to bed.

Two or three days passed, and Eddy was begin-That the Saviour of sinners has knocked at my | ning to forget about his naughtiness, and to follow his father about and to talk to him as usual, when That thy voice has commanded the dead to revive, one day a man who lived in the village came to the house.

> Eddy did not remember having seen him anywhere, but just as he was going away he put his hand on the little boy's head, and said, "Is this your boy, Mr. ——? I saw him at the store the other day, but I didn't know it was your boy." So just in one minute it had all come out. Eddy's father only looked at him, and Eddy's face became very red. Not a word was spoken, however, till the gentleman was gone. Then the father sat down on a log in the yard, and said, "what is this, my boy? Were you at the store the other day?" And Eddy, standing between his father's knees, with his arms around him, sobbed out the whole shameful story. His father listened to the end, without a word, and then the great tears began to roll down his cheeks, and after a little silence he said, in a voice that was all trembling and broken:

"I don't care anything about the three cents. The hardest of it is that I can't trust my boy !" Those few words cut Eddy to the heart and made him feel worse than the hardest whipping would have done. Eddy's father died two years after, when he was nine years old. He says he has wept many a time, even since he became a man, as he thought of those words : " The hardest of it is that I can't trust my boy."- Congregationalist.

ne himself. It happened to him when he was little boy, seven years old.

His name was Edward. I won't tell you his last name, because he is alive now, and he might not like to have me, though he gave me permission, to tell you the story.

The school-mistress called him to her one night after the school was dismissed, and said to him : "Eddy, here are three cents that belong to your father. He paid some money yesterday, and we made a mistake in reckoning, so that I got too much. I found it out when I got home, and you may give it to him. Be careful not to lose it. Have you a pocket ?"

What boy seven years old ever got along without a pocket ; unless, perhaps, he had'nt any mother? Eddy had a kind mother, so of course he had a pocket. He liked to carry money in his pocket. He went along jingling the three red coppers . -that was before three-cent pieces or paper scrip were thought of, and they were big, old-fashioned kindness? No, indeed ! He wanted the seven cents, and made a pretty loud jingle.

Eddy had quite a long walk to school, and there was only one scholar who went his way. That was Hatty C----, but I suppose I mustn't tell you her last name either. It would'n be quite fair, because perhaps she has repented of all her childish mis- got well punished for stealing that apple." deeds long ago, and come to be really a good woman. I'm sure I hope she has. Well, Eddy and said his friend ? "Seven," said Willie, blushing Hatty walked along home together that night as usual; and Eddy kept jingling his three cents in his pocket as he went.

"Did your father know that the mistress was going to send him those three cents ?" asked Hatty, after a while.

"No, he didn't," said Eddy, " for he didn't know there was any mistake."

"Then he would never know about it if the teacher had'nt sent it ?"

"I guess not," said Eddy.

Our Saviour, when he was on earth, often taught the people by parables. The parable told to the little boys was of a kind man who had some very rich apples hanging upon the tree. A poor man was passing by the house of the owner, and he stopped to admire this beautiful apple tree. He counted these golden pippins. There were just seven of them The rich owner could afford to give them STEAM ENGINE AND MACHINE SHOP, away, and it gave him so much pleasure to make this poor man happy, that he called him and said,

"My friend, I will give you a part of my fruit." So he held out his hand, and received six of the apples. The owner had only kept one for himself. Do you think the poor man was grateful for this pippins all for himself, and at last he made up his mind that he would watch his time, and go back and steal the other apple?

"Did he do that ?" said Willie, very sorry. "He ought to have been ashamed of himself. I hope he
