NEVER DESPAIR.

Never despair! The darkest cloud That ever loomed will pass away; The longest night will yield to dawn,

The dawn will kindle into day! What if around the lonely bark Break fierce and high the waves of sorrow, Stretch every oar ! there's land ahead,

And thou wilt gain the port to-morrow ! When fortune frowns and summer friends, Like birds that fear a storm, depart, Some, if thy breast hath tropic warmth,

Will stay and nestle round the heart! If thou art poor no joy is won, No good is gained by sad repining; Gems, buried in the darkened earth

May yet be gathered for the mining! There is no lot, however sad, There is no roof, however low, But has some joy to make it glad, Some latent bliss to soothe its woe; The light of hope will linger near

When wildest beats the heart's emotion-A talisman when breakers roar, A bright star o'er the troubled ocean. The farmer knows not if his fields

With flood or drought or blight must cope; He questions not the fickle skies, But ploughs, and sows, and toils in hope; Then up and strive, and dare, and do, Nor doubt a harvest thou wilt gather-

A time to work, a time to wait, And trust to God for genial weather!

ARTHUR'S SUBSTITUTE.

I went to pay a visit at the Mays, and I found Mr. May and Mrs. May and Fanny and Tom, and all the rest, in a great stir about a poor family who lived in one of the back streets.

"What does the doctor say about Mrs. Doty? asks Mr. May, when he comes in to dinner. " I want you to see to it, Sarah," he said to his wife, "that she has the best of attendance."

"Fanny, have you carried the beef-tea to Mrs. Doty ?" Mrs. May asks of her eldest daughter. "Mother, I did as you bid," said Tom, "and sent the oranges to Mrs. Doty." These, and questions like them, showing an unusual interest in a family I never heard of before, aroused my curiosity. "And who in the world are the Dotys?" I asked Fanny, "and what special claims have they on you?" "Why, do you not know?" said Fanny with surprise. "Mr. Doty was Arthur's substitute."

"Arthur's substitute! What do you mean?" for the war and its terrible sacrifices seemed so long

"Have your forgotten?" asked Fanny, and I thought there was a touch of reproach in her voice. "Arthur was drafted to go to the war. The thought almost killed father. You know how a substitute for him. Arthur said No, he would never ask a man to go and be shot for him. Father too, felt we must stand our chances with the rest of the country, and his son was no dearer to him than other men's sons were to their parents. Mother said nothing; she only prayed and worked to get him ready. "One night—it was one Saturday night—John Doty, a man who liked father, came to the house and offered to take Arthur's place. I shall never forget that night. Tom and Katy and Cousin Lou were in the room and heard it. Tom ran out to tell us. Then Katy came, then Cousin Lou, and forget mother. hearts.—Child's Paper. MARRIAGE MAXIMS.

The following "marriage maxims" are worthy of more than a hasty reading. Husbands need not pass them by, for they are designed for wives; and wives should not despise them for they are addressed to husbands:

The very nearest approach to domestic happiness on earth is the cultivation on both sides of absolute unselfishness.

Never both be angry at once.

Never speak loud to one another-unless the Let each one strive to yield the oftenest to the

Never find fault, unless it is perfectly certain that a fault has been committed, and always speak kindly. Never taunt with a past mistake. Neglect the whole world besides, rather than one

Never make a remark at the expense of each other; it is meanness, Never part a day without loving words to think of during absence. Never meet without an affectionate welcome. Never let the sun go down upon any anger or Never let any fault you have committed go by until you have frankly confessed it, and asked forgiveness. Never forget the happy hours of early love. Never forget that marriage is ordained of God, and that his blessing alone can make it what it should ever be.

THE ROUSED TIGER.

You have read of deeds of cruelty and crime committed by people in a violent rage, and have wondered that one could be guilty of such acts. But every one who nourishes that tiger passion in his heart knows not to what it may at last lead him.

A man in India had a little tiger cub brought up in his house, of which he grew very fond. The animal played about him like a kitten, and was so gentle fawning that the man had no fear. But terms. when the tiger was fully grown he chanced one-day in licking his master's hand, to taste of blood from a scratch upon it. In a moment his whole appearance changed. His eye-balls glared with the fire of a wild beast of the jungles, and he continued to lick the hand clear to the bone. The man knew that to stir would be certain death, so he was forced to sit there and endure the agony till a friend appeared who shot the tiger dead. Not so fortunate was a native who had trained up a young lion; and finding him weak, had never offered to restrain him, and teach him to fear his master. When he was grown, in a moment of irritation he fell upon him and tore him to pieces. If we let this disposition to anger grow stronger and stronger in our hearts, we can not tell how soon it will gain the mastery over us, and hurry us into acts from which we shrink now with terror. Many a man has killed his fellow in a moment of passion, and mourned over it bitterly, but uselessly, in his cooler hours.

Check the first risings of this spirit in your heart and you will never have cause to mourn thus over its bitter fruit.

ev gathered around him. Then he told them a parable. Our Saviour, when he was on earth, often taught the people by parables.

This parable was of a kind man who had some very rich apples hanging upon a tree. A poor man was passing by the house of the owner, and he stopped to admire this beautiful apple-tree. He counted those ripe, golden pippins—there were just seven of them. The rich owner could afford to give them away; and it gave him so much pleasure to make this poor man happy, that he called him, and

"My friend, I will give you a part of my fruit." So he held out his hand, and received six of the tions, viz.: Fluid Extracts, Aikaloids, Elixirs, Resmois apples. The owner had kept one for himself. Do you think the poor man was grateful for his Wholesale and retail by

"Did he do that?" said Willie, very indignantly, "He ought to be ashamed of himself." "How many days are there in a week, Willie?"

said his friend.
