THE UNKNOWN FALLEN.

Come let us go To the plains of the South where the fallen lay; Where the stricken and sorrowing fondly stray; chain,

With joy and with sorrow his tribute hath lain, There let us go.

Sad is the scene, The valleys where flourished the rich waving grain, And plains once abounding in cotton and cane, Are furrowed and ravaged with grape-shot and

And strewn with the bones of brave heroes who fell, How sad the scene!

Fiercely they fought In terrible conflict, their country to serve, Rebellion to crush, and the Union preserve; Amid heaps of the dying and dead lying low, Fiercely they fought,

'Twas their last charge, Thinner their ranks grew : they spake not a word ; Death gleamed in the cannon, and flashed on the sword:

They thought of their loved ones and freedom and God: And shattered and mangled they fell 'neath his rod:

'Twas their last charge. All stark and cold,

The sword dripping red, and the rifle laid low; The faithful steed prostrate, his nostrils still wide; But gone is his spirit, his beauty and pride: All stark and cold.

They lie unknown,

They lie unknown. Yet not unknown,

Though comrades and dear ones no fond trace can

While searching and praying on low bending knee; For Willie and Charlie to press to their heart Their pale lips to kiss, and forever then part; Still not unknown.

Yes they are known; Some guardian angel on white spreading wing, Sees the soul's broken casket, each atom could his wickedness.

And the last thought that ran through the brain, And their last portion, the goal they will gain; Yes they are known.

They all still live The words they once uttered, the sonnets they day be revealed .- Home Journal.

Are thought of and cherished and fostered with

So they all live. They offered all,

Their life for the Union, their blood for the stain Of crime and oppression and darkness and pain; The priests at the altar were Lincoln and Grant, And God out of heaven a blessing has sent; They offered all.

Some fell in peace, With Jesus our Saviour, and heaven will see, The home of the blest and the land of the free; Where garlands of beauty, and laurels of palm, Wait God's true soldiers, there sheltered from harm; There all is peace. B. MINARD.

DOG TEAMS IN SIBERIA.

The winter travel of the Kamtchadals is accomplished entirely upon dog-sledges, and in no other pursuit of their lives do they spend more time, and exhibit their native skill and ingenuity to better advantage. They may be even said to have made dogs for themselves in the first place, for the present Siberian animal is nothing more than a half-domesticated Arctic wolf, and still retains all his wolfish instincts and peculiarities. There is, probably, no more hardy, enduring animal in the world. You may compel him to sleep out on the snow in a temperature of 79 degrees below zero, drive him with heavy loads until his feet crack open and print the snow with blood, or starve him until he "HE SAYS HE WILL."-" What do you do witheats harness; but his strength and his spirit seem out a mother to tell all your troubles to?" said a alike unconquerable. They are harnes sed to the sledge in successive couples, by a long central thong of seal-skin, to which each individual dog is attached by a collar and a short trace. They are guided and controlled entirely by the voice and by a lead-dog who is especially trained for the purpose. The driver carries no whip; but has instead a thick stick, about four feet in length and two inches in diameter, called an "oerstel." This is armed at one end with a long iron spike, and is used to check the speed of the sledge, in descending hills, and to stop the dogs when they leave the road, as they frequently do, in pursuit of reindeer and foxes. The thistle was from that time adopted as the national emblem of Scotland.
