ALFRED'S TEN-CENT PIECE.

Cherries! fine ripe cherries! here they go ten cents a quart!" This is what Alfred Hope heard one morning, as he sat on the back steps getting his fishing-line in order to use that aftenoon.

"Hallo!" said he, "there's old Isaac, with cherries to sell. I believe I'll buy some," and he thurst his hand into his pocket, to see if the ten-cent piece his father had given him that morning was safe.

Yes there it was, keeping company with slatepencils, knife, chalk, pieces of string, and all the various articles which usua'ly find their way into the pockets of school-boys. Then, seizing his hat, he ran out of the gate after Isaac, who by this time had trundled his wheelbarrow some distance down

Alfred throught of his father's words as he handed in his money, and determined that another week he would save some of his own.

He told his mother so that afternoon, when they had their usual quiet Sunday talk.

"But," said he, "what is a boy to do when there are so many nice things to buy? and I never keep all I get for myself. There was Frank and Joe came along just as I bought my cherries, and I gave part to them. "I should not like you to be selfish or mean, my dear boy," said his mother, " and I hope you will always be ready to share your pleasures with others. TAKING THINGS WITHOUT ASKING.

Boys seldom like to hear much about prayer. I never did when I was a boy. I had an idea that it was not manly to pray much, and so I said my prayers when I was obliged to, and never uttered a real prayer till I was driven to it by a sense that it was certainly very unmanly not to pray. Boys have a great idea of being manly, and I honor them for it; but they often make sadmistakes in the way which they take of showing manliness. But one thing you will admit is manly and noble, and that is to ask for what you receive. It is wrong to take without asking, and very shabby not to say "Thank While from its open wound comes softly dripping, you," after receiving a gift; yet this is just what a person does who does not pray. I once had that lesson impressed upon my mind in rather a peculiar manner, and I must tell you about it. When I was Esq a boy, I was playing out in the street one winter's day, catching ride on sleighs, and it was great fun. Boys would rather catch rides any day than was catching on to one sleigh and another, some-From all these claims of cruel wrong and anguish, times having a nice time and ofttimes getting a cut from a big black whip, I at last fastened like a barnacle to the side of a countryman's cutter. The colloquy was as follows: "Young man, do you like to ride?"

"Yes, sir."

"Do you own this cutter, young man?" " No sir."

"It's a pretty nice cutter, isn't it?"

"Yes, sir, it is, and a nice horse drawing it." "Did I ask you to get in ?"

"Did you ask if you might get in?" "No. sir." "Well, then, why did you get in?"
