MUCH MORE.

The Lord is able to give thee much more than this 2 Chron. xxv. 9. "Much more than this"-O loving Christ ! The Father's greatest gift, In whom "all things" are ours-to Thee Our waiting eyes to lift; Their askings cannot grow too large Since we with Thee are heirs, Although by ways still dark, we near Thy answers to our prayers.

Thy kingly giving far outweighs All that we ask or think, Drawing us to Thy heart of love By many an upward link. And faith may climb the ladder, Prayer, Each step and answer given, Each round inscribed "much more than this," Up to the gates of heaven.

The tender reachings of Thy hand Far underlie our wants; The same great love that stoops to hear, Interprets, ere it grants; However ill we know to ask For blessings all untold, Thou knowest well what good to give, What wisely to withhold.

And when, some lesser light gone out, We blindly grope for Thee, Teach us, dear Jesus, step by step, To trust thee utterly; Anoint our sorrow-lidded eyes With Thy sweet strengthening grace, And lift them to the Light of Life Full shining in Thy face.

Take Thou these blind and stammering prayers That scarce can spell Thy name; Correct, enlarge them, make them bold To plead thy children's claim; Then pour the storehouse of thy love, Send answer down, until Sweet mercy's measure running o'er, Our deepest need shall fill ! - Christian Witness.

few wild plums; and the fourth, and the fifth, on STEAM ENGINE AND MACHINE SHOP field. Everything had been destroyed by the Indians; but, searching carefully, part of a spoiled ham was found, and the two children ate heartily of this, saving the remainder for future use. This, with wild plums and raw green corn, was their only food till late on the eleventh day, when Burton, carrying the baby brother, who was now too weak to walk, entered Mankato, where fugitives from all Here every house was thrown open, and the two children were soon cared for. When he had seen Willie drink a glass of milk and lie down in a

An August morning-cool and clear as the August mornings in Minnesota are almost sure to bethe sun shining out over the little settlement, and the blue waters of Lake Shetek, and gilding the dark pines on the northern shore. Only five o'clock, but the people are all astir, for harvesting has just begun, and the great fields of wheat and corn must be gathered in by fewer hands than last year. It was war time-1862-and the first battle of Bull Run was still fresh in the minds of every one; and sitting on the doorstep, little Burton Estlick spelled out the account of it in the weekly paper, which had come in only yesterday, while the baby pattered about with his small bare feet, and talked in an unknown tongue about everything.

Burton's father was a private in one of the Western regiments, and had left his wife and two children in a neighbor's charge, till his two years of army life should be over. Burton, though but just nine years old, was learning in good earnest to be a farmer's boy. For two years he had lived with his mother in this lonely country, half a dozen families having left Mankato, some seventy miles east, and settled on the prairie back of Lake Shetek.

The Sioux, Chippewas, and Winnebagoes still roamed over the greater part of Minnesota, and no one thought of fearing them, as all professed the friendliest feelings toward the whites. Now and then the Sioux and Chippewas, who have always been deadly enemies, went on the war path against each other, and Burton had seen some Chippewa scalps brought in by a neighboring band of Sioux, some of whom came often to the house to beg for provisions.

So this morning, as his mother took the milkingpail, and went out toward the barn, where the cows stood lowing, he picked up his little brother and followed her slowly, thinking of the great battle, and wondering if his father would be in any, and how it must seem to hear the bullets whizzing around one's head. Looking up as he heard the clatter of hoofs, he saw some twenty Indians riding toward the next house, hardly a stone's-throw away, and he went on, meaning to ask if they were going out against the Chippewas. Willie stopped him a moment to ask for a bright flower growing near the fence; as Burton stooped | carried the baby to pick it, he heard two shots fired in quick succession, and then a terrible yell-and Mr. Hurd, who had been standing near the door with his baby in his arms, fell dead. At the same moment his moth- of all I have told you here .- Our Young Folks. er, with white, scared face, pulled him away by the hand.

"Run into the bush," she whispered, " or the Indians will kill us all."

As she spoke she caught little Willie, and ran down the road toward the thick bush, but was piece of the set of furniture her uncle had given her All orders entrusted to them from this, or the adjoining stopped half-way by two Indian women, who rose up suddenly from behind a log where they were crouching. As Mrs. Estlick tore herself away from them, they ran toward the house screaming that a woman was escaping. Two of the Indians fired : one ball, glancing from Burton's shoulder, made on- | had broken my chairs, too.' ly a deep cut ; the other, striking Mrs. Estlick's ankle, crushed the bone. She fell, but in a moment was up again, and, leaning on Burton, pulled telling Mrs. Hurd that if she would give no alarm, she might go with her children by the trail they pointed out, leading eastward over the prairie to am sure." New Ulm. As Mrs. Estlick looked back a moment, she saw her hurrying toward the trail, and had she dared to leave the bush would have followed.

But my dear child, you cannot find her ! It she s alive at all, some of the wagons have picked her ip and brought her in. She may be here in town.' "Then I will look here first," said Burton. As he insisted, Mrs. Hutchinson went with him through the town asking one after another if they knew whether any of the people at Lake Shetek had been saved. At last, as they passed one house, Burton saw their old neighbour, Mrs. Hurd, at the window, and running in he found his mother, too weak from pain and starvation, to speak and sorrowing for the children whom she supposed to be dead. Little Willie was brought to her at once, and the ings, as she held the two close to her again. There were few questions that night, but the next day Mrs. Estlick told Burton how she had crawled

For a fortnight the terrible massacre lasted. The people of the State, trusting in the friendship of the Indians, had been totally unprepared for such an outbreak, and the Indians themselves, who had been assured by half-breeds that the white people were too busy fighting each other to pay any attention to them, expected fully to take possession of the whole State, and burn and murder where they would. Terrible wrongs had been done them, and they avenged them even more terribly. Two hundred miles of beautiful country were made desolate. Hundreds died by savage hands, while hundreds more were taken into a captivity worse than death, which lasted till late in the fall, when they were rescued by Gen. Sibley's command. Long before this Mrs. Estlick had left Minnesota far behind. But even now, at times, in her quiet New-England home, a shudder creeps over her, as FIRST INTIMATION! she recalls that August morning eight years ago, and remembers the weary way over which Burton
