BY-AND-BY.

By and-by! We say it softly, Thinking of a tender hope Stirring always in our bosoms, Where so many longings grope.

By-and-by! Oh love shall greet us, In a time that is to come, And the fears that now defeat us Then shall all be stricken dumb!

By-and-by! The mournful sorrows, Clouding o'er our sky to-day, Shall be gone in glad to-morrow, Shall be banished quite away!

By-and-by! We say it gently, Looking on our silent dead; And we do not think of earth-life. But of heaven's sweet life instead!

By-and-by! We look in yearning Toward the harbor of the blest, And we see the beacons burning In the ports of perfect rest.

By-and-by! Our ship shall anchor, If the tide and wind are fair, Some day in the port of heaven, Where our lost and loved ones are.

By-and-by! Oh say it softly, Thinking not of earth and care, But the by-and-by of heaven, Waiting for us over there!

UNCLE HARVEY'S FIRST VOYAGE. BY MAY BRADFORD.

Nevertheless, I persisted in making my by the scorching sun of the tropics, and my hair boats and sailing them in every puddle I could find, bleached by the numerous cares of the passing and resolutely clung to the idea of going to sea | years; but I am anchored in a quiet harbour at last, my mother took me with her to visit my grandfather who lived in the sea-port village of Y There my eyes were gratified by beholding, for the first time, the broad, blue waters of the Atlantic ocean. As I watched a beautiful ship that lay at anchor in the harbor, awaiting orders to sail, my eagerness to become a sailor rose nearly to phrenzy. I cried bitterly because my mother told me I was too young to go to sea, and that I should be sent to my father in disgrace, if I did not cease teasing her. I thought her very unkind to me, and, though I said no more to her, I still looked out at the ship with longing eyes.

At last the day came on which it was reported that the ship was to sail. How well I remember it -seventy years next August. The atmosphere was hazy, the air very sultry and oppressive, while the ocean lay so still that the breaking of the surf upon the long line of beach came to my ears like some dreamy murmur. A skift belonging to one of my uncles lay moored at a little log pier in the cove and, during the last hour I had been curled up on its bow, watching with envious eyes the busy bustle on board the ship. Suddenly some evil spirit whispered to me to loose the skiff from its mooring, float out on the tide, hail the ship as she passed me, and be taken on board. I was a wicked boy to indulge a moment in such thoughts, but no sooner indulged in, than acted upon, and I immediately felt the gliding movement of the skiff as it drifted away from the pier, and heard the musical ripple of the water as it parted before the bow. I soon saw that the distance between myself and the ship was rapidly increasing, and never thinking that a ship could not sail without wind I kept wondering why she did not start. However, I felt no fear, partly because I was too young to realize my danger, and partly because I had such love for the ocean as to leave no room in my heart for fear.

The sun soon sank behind the high hills that boldly out-lined the coast, and as I sat peering into the darkening distance, I must have fallen asleep, and slept all night as though in my own bed, for I remember nothing more until something shook me rather roughly by the shoulder, and a loud voice shouted in my ear-" Wake up, boy! wake up, I say! In the name of all that's good what are ye

I rubbed my eyes open and found the sun shining brightly, but instead of myself being on shipboard as I had dreamed, my skiff was alongside a fishing smack, and a gray-bearded man held me by

The sea air had given me a fine appetite, and with thanks I took the food and ate a hearty meal. We sailed along before a light breeze for nearly half an hour, when the wind began to rise, and soon every wave was dancing merrily, and every few minutes the salt spray would fly all over us; then the captain said:

cuddy there, and stay, for ye han't used to sich baths as this that's commin'!"

"I should rather stay here if you are willing," re-

" Han't ye 'fraid ?" queried he.

"No, sir, I like it," replied I. "Well, well! That's what I call the right sort o' stuff to make a sailor out on," said he, turning to one of the crew. "Bring out an ile jacket and roll him up in it for 'twon't do to let him git too wet!" That was my first introduction to-or into-an oil jacket; and, uncouth as it was, I found it kept every inch of canvas spread. "Oh, captain," exclaimed I, "That is the same ship that I wished to sail in! Why didn't she go before ?" He turned his full gray eyes upon me, and in tones that awed me, said:

"And where d'ye spose ye'd hev bin, if the wind that carries that ship had came on last night? The fishes would hev held yer funeral away down in the black water, afore this !"

I shuddered a little, for I began to have some idea of the danger which I had escaped. I had not listened to my conscience, but had done that which I knew was against my mother's wishes, and I felt that it was the merciful hand of God that had held me back from the terrible fate that might have been mine. A VISIT SPOILED.

In the Youth's Companion Sophie May tells the following story, which Grandmother Silverthorn told little Fanny, of her hardly-earned and long anticipated visit to her dearest little school friend, Betsey Turner, who had "moved" six months pre-

"Well, we wandered about all over the farm, and fed the lambs, and played house-keeping just as happy as a pair of pidgeons, till all of a sudden, out in the field, I said something that made her angry; and then she tossed her head just as she used to at chool, and said:

"' There now, Thankful Patten, I won't speak to ou again as long as you stay at my house.' "She didn't stop to reflect how hard I had work-d for a chance to getting there, or she couldn't have been so cruel. But Betsey had got into such habit of tormenting me, that the words came out efore she thought." "What had you done to her, grandma?"

"I don't remember now, some simple thing. But here I was, ever so far away from home, and no Betsey to speak to. My visit that I had 'lotted on was all spoiled, and I didn't want to stay another JOHN SMITH, - - - - PROPRIETOR.

JAS. BEVERIDGE. October 25 .- tf. CHURNS! CHURNS! CHURNS HEALTH! TIME! MONEY! Why Should I Buy Kitchen's Patent Churn't BECAUSE they preserve health, save time, save money, and the churning is all done in 5 or 10 minutes. You will then believe what I assure you is true, viz.: That I have for sale the best churn ever invented- Kitchen's

Patent Rotary Double Dasher. This churn has two Dashers, each revolving in an opposite direction It is useless to attempt a description of this churn in an advertisement, it has to be seen to be appreciated. It is estimated by practical farmers that it will produce one-tenth more butter from the same quantity of cream than any other to call at my store, examine the article, and select for ELY PERKINS.
