"HE WILL GIVE GRACE AND GLORY.

Have you told it all to Jesus, All your want and pain and grief; Shown Him just how heavy weighed Is the heart that seeks relief?

Earthly counsellors might chide thee, Fail thy griefs to understand, Turn to Him who walks beside thee, Christ, who holds thee in His hand.

Never any heavy laden Cry to Him, and cry in vain; Never any he upbraideth, Though they come again, again.

All the secret, deep recesses Of thy many-chambered soul, Naked, open lie before Him, Clearly doth He read the whole.

Perfectly He understandeth, Perfect healing can he give; Only turn to him and trust Him, Only look to Him and live.

Drear and wide the dusky valley Of thy pilgrimage may seem; Faint and far the Shining City As the fabric of a dream;

But the measure of hand-breadth Is the measure of thy life; Nearer than thy fears the coming Of the peace beyond the strife.

Though thy feet press through the valley, Courage! for the heights are thine; Even now above the shadows Doth the radiant morning shine. -Zion's Herald.

WHAT BOB AND BERT DID FOR GOD. "Never mind, Bert ; one more good stroke and its down," and the boy's eager eyes sparkled as he slung the ax with good will. Bert looked on for a moment; but it was only a moment, for renewed vigor started up and looked out of his tired eyes, and he went at it again; and chop, chop, the sound of litle axes rang out sharp and clear in the evening air, and in another mo ment, with a loud crash, down came the tree.

"There!" said Bob, "I think we've well earned our supper; but here comes Dan with the cows, let's call him to come and look, and then we'll run right in and be ready by the time papa comes."

Dan left the cows to themselves, for a few minutes, very willingly, and came and admired the boys' work, and than off they ran to wash their hands and smooth their hair, for mamma always liked them to look very neat when they came to the table; and what was there in this world that they appointed at not being able to help him finish the Motts' Broma, Cocoa and Chocolate; 14 bhds. Porto Rico would not do to please mamma?

said Bert, as they passed it on their way up-stairs but papa and mamma thought it looked a great deal pleasanter when, a quarter of an hour afterward, the two bright, manly-looking boys came into it and, after a respectful though familiar "good evening, papa," took their seats at the bountiful spread

"Well, my men, how does the work progress Any chance of that tree coming down within the next month or so ?" So generous-hearted Bob looked at his younger brother, as much as to say, "You tell him, Bert;" but Bert wasn't going to be out-done, so he shook his curly head; and then Bob could'nt keep it to himself any longer, for they hadn't even told mamma yet.

just before tea. He's down, really and truly down; and Dan says we brought him down beautifully He'll sleep to-night lying down; and I should think as grand as a prince, and Bob walking by his side it would be quite a rest for him after standing for so many years," and the boy laughed merrily at his | never needed a touch of it. t, for he was afraid the boys might get tired of their good work when they found how it would and at last their labour was rewarded and the tree came down, and it only remained for them to cut it up and carry it to old Phineas' wood shed.

The next morning the boys were up before the sun; and the first thing mamma saw, when she looked out of her window, was the tall tree lying on the ground in front of the barn, with Bob at one end and Bert at the other, lopping off the branches with might and main. How it thrilled her heart to see her two dear little boys working so cheerfully and so joyfully for the sake of the dear Saviour whom she had taught them to love so well. But what was the matter with Bert? Was he tired out that he sunk so listlessly on the grass? She had just time to see Bob rush to him and seize him in his arms, before she flew down stairs and took her darling from him, pale as death.

"Oh! Bob; what is it? Is he dead?" "Mamma, I think he has cut himself. I heard him say, "here goes for a good stroke," and was just going to turn round and look, when I heard him groan, and then I saw him fall on the ground, and I think he has fainted." They carried the little boy very carefully into the dining room, and laid him on the lounge. He had only fainted from excess of pain, and came to in a few minutes; and then they found that he had cut his leg very badly. Poor little fellow; he had been so much in earnest, and had slung the ax with such good will, that when it slipped and missed the mark, he received the full brunt of the blow.

The Doctor came and dressed the wound, and gave them what comfort he could, by telling them that it would not result in anything serious; but he was afraid, he said, that Bert would not be able to walk for weeks yet. The boy's big blue eyes filled with tears when he heard this, but the good old Doctor seeing it, said, "Why never mind, Bert, my boy; it won't be so very hard to stay in the house for a while, will it? It's getting most too cold, anyhow, to play out of doors now; and I would rather be you, by the good warm fire, than Bob there, who has to go out in the cold to school

The kind old man thought to comfort him; but

Bert said,— "It isn't the having to stay in the house, Doctor; but I shant be able to help Bob finish the wood, and old Phineas will want it so badly, now that the cold weather is so near at hand."

"Never mind, Bertie," said Bob; "I'll manage it how, and will get it to him yet, before Jack Frost catches him."

Then how Bob did work. Up every morning at daybreak, and at it again as soon as he came home from school in the afternoon.

He was pretty tired when bed time came, and his arms ached so, sometimes, that he couldn't play ball with the other boys at recess; but he had made up his mind that the old man should have his wood for the winter; besides, he had another plan to work out. He knew how poor Bert had been diswork they had commenced so gleefully together, "How pleasant the dining room looks to-night," and he knew he had been calculating so much upon 11/4 tons Cheese; 80 doz. bottles Mixed Pickles Sauces, seeing the surprise and pleasure of old Phineas, Preserved Ginger; 20 sacks of Rice; 20 brls. HEALTH! TIME! MONEY! Why Should I Buy Kitchen's Patent Churn? BECAUSE they preserve health, save time, save money, and the churning is all done in 5 or 10 minutes. You will then believe what I assure you is true, viz.; That I have for sale the best churn ever invented-Kitchen's Patent Rotary Double Dasher. This churn has two Dashers, each revolving in an opposite direction. It is useless to attempt a description of this churn in an advertisement, it has to be seen to be appreciated. It is estimated by practical farmers that it will produce one-tenth more butter from the same quantity of cream than any other churn now in use The public are respectfully requested England and United States-1 cask Screws; 1 cask to call at my store, examine the article, and select for ELY PERKINS,
