I gave my life for thee, My precious blood I shed, That thou might ransomed be, And quickened from the dead. I gave my life for thee; What hast thou given for me?

I spent long years for thee, In weariness and woe, That one eternity

Of joy thou mightest know; I spent long years for thee; Has thou spent one for me?

My Father's house of light, My rainbow circled throne, I left for earthly night, For wand'rings sad and lone; I left it all for thee; Hast thou left aught for me?

I suffered much for thee,-More than thy tongue can tell, Of bitterest agony,

To rescue thee from hell, I suffered much for thee; What dost thou bear for me?

And I have brought to thee, Down from my home above, Salvation full and free, My pardon and my love; Great gifts I brought to thee; What hast thou brought to me?

Oh, let thy life be given, Thy years for me be spent, World-fetters, all be riven, And joy with suffering blent. I gave myself for thee; Give thou thyself to me.

A VISIT TO MOUNT VESUVIUS. A volcano! Is there a boy or girl who would not like to see a volcano? Who is there that would not go a long journey to see Vesuvius-that wonwas younger than I am now I read about Mount Vesuvius-how the mount was on fire, and was always smoking like a coal-pit, or boiling over like a dinner-pot—how at times rivers of fire rolled down its sides, destroying fields and woods, houses and vineyards, cities and towns, and carrying desolation from crater to the sea. The geography that I studied at school had a picture of the great traveler, explorer, and man of science - Alexander Humboldt-sitting on a shelving rock, and looking down into a lake of fire and brimstone that rolled and surged, and bubbled hundreds of feet below him. I often wished that I could see a volcano, and the time came at length when the desire of my boyhood was gratified.

It was a bright winter morning in February when we started out from a hotel in the city of Naples to ascend Vesuvius. We could see the mountain a dozen miles away to the east, with a thin gray column of smoke rising from its summit. The street along which we rode runs by the shore of the sea, whose waves were rippling on the beach along the coast, loaded to the water's edge with oranges. I think that I never had seen so many oranges before in my life. There were thousands of bushels. They lay in great piles on the shores; there were baskets, boats, carts, and wagons heaped with them. And so cheap! I bought ten for a cent! How delicious they were! We obtain no good oranges in this country, for to get them to our market they must be picked before they are ripe. The people of Naples and Messina would think that the oranges in our market were only fit for pigs to eat. There were hundreds of carts in the streets, and thousands of donkeys carrying panniers since saw so many donkeys together as there were along the quay. The country people were in with vegetables for the market, consisting mainly of garlics, onions, cabbages, carrots, and cauliflowers. Not unfrequently the donkeys would be so covered up with cabbages and carrots, that I could only see their noses and the flapping of their ears.

The Italians are very cruel toward the brute creation. They overload their horses and donkeys, and whip them unmercifully. I have seen chicken pedlers break the wings and legs of the fowls they were taking to market, so that the poor things could not fly or run away. I wanted to give the Naples missionary ground. I did not see a well-fed work-horse in the city. The people keep their horses and donkeys at the point of starvation. They do not give them much hay, and little, if any grain; but feed them almost wholly on carrots.

As we ride along the street, our hack-driver stops a huckster and buys four cents worth of carrots for his horse's dinner. Thinking of bating a span of horses at that rate! The carrots were about six inches long, and they were about two dozen in the bundle—just a nibble for each horse. The horses were to go nearly thirty miles, out and back-to be gone all day, and this was their feed. There is not a farmer's boy in America that would have taken less than a peck of oats for each horse. A merciful man is not only merciful to his beast, but gives good feed.

The street is crowded with people and carriages and especially with omnibuses; -not such gaily painted vehicles as we seen in our own cities—but a two-wheeled affair, somewhat like a sulky, but more like a dray. It is drawn by one horse, and there is only one seat; but will carry from sixteen to twenty passengers! Four persons sit on the seatwhile the others stand up or sit on the shafts with the driver; and there are usually four or five children that have a jolly time in a bag beneath the axle! We meet many of these carriages coming into the city from the suburbs. We pass a public washing place where there is a great crowd of women and girls round a trough, dipping clothes in the water and slapping them on the stones, and pounding them with a paddle to get the dirt out. There is not a Yankee washing machine in all Naples. They do their washing without soap; and it is pretty much the way of the world everywhere, except in the United States, England, and Northern | little water, adding that he was very ill, and it Europe. Mount Vesuvius, a tall conical mountain, shaped ef Anesdots.

like a stack of hay, and rising high above the Bay of Naples. At the base of the mountain we left our carriage and the main road, mounted our horses, and turned into a green lane and began the ascent.

There was a crowd of beggars around me-holding out their hands, and their dirty caps begging for money. Four of them seized my horse by the bridle, and had a fight among themselves to see which should lead it; three or four more wanted to hold me on, and tried to make me understand that I should fall off; others caught hold of the horse's tail determined to have the animal pull them up the mountain. They were villainous-looking wretches, with black beards, dirty faces, slouched hats, and in rags and tags.

"Go back," Isaid. They bawled the louder. "Clear out!" They begged the harder. "Be off! Mind your business!" They didn't start. "I won't have you!" I doubled up my fist, but they didn't mind it. I jumped from my horse, seized a cudgel and was on again in a twinkling. They understood went on our way peacefully up the mountain, enjoying one of the loveliest views in all the world. It is about four thousand feet to the top. The entire mountain is of lava that has been thrown up from time to time from the interior of the earth.

Ages ago the volcano was in action; then the lava ceased to boil, and the whole mountain was covered with vines and trees. Seventy-two years before Christ was born, that brave warrior Spartacus-whom you, I dare say, have read about in Roman history—made the crater of Vesuvius his hiding-place.

Plutarch, the old Roman historian, tells us that there was only one way to get to the crater over the rocks, and that Claudius posted his guards at the bottom of the precipice to starve out Spartacus; but the brave-spirited fellow and his followers were not be caught in that way, for one night they made the grape vines into ropes, let themselves down the other side of the mountain, and were far away before Claudius knew that they had escaped.

It was in the year 79, about 1,800 years ago, that one day, about noon, the top of the mountain suddenly blew off-or out, or up, just like the explosion of a steam-boiler-with a terrible noise, and the air was filled with red-hot stones, cinders, smoke and steam, that darkened the sun and spread over all the surrounding country. There were terrific earthquakes, - the whole mountain rocked and al thunderings. The cinders fell on Pompeii, a city on the south side of the mountain, and buried A river of molten, red-hot lava rolled down the western side, over the town of Herculaneum, burying and destroying every thing in its path. Vineyards, houses, barns, wheat fields, and gardens -everything that could burn was enveloped in flames. The whole side of the mountain was on fire. The lava rolled into the sea, and heated the water boiling hot, and cooked all the fishes in the harbor, so that the next day and for weeks afterward the sea-shore was strewn with dead fishes already cooked for dinner! From that time to the present the fires have been constantly burning, and the hole in the top of the mountain has either been sending up columns of steam and smoke, or throwing up red-hot stones, or boiling over like a kettle.

There have been nearly sixty great eruptions, besides numerous smaller ones. In 1822, the top of the mountain suddenly fell in with a loud crash, and then there was a furious boiling of the cauldron. For four days there was a continuous shower of red-hot stones rained upon the surrounding counand gently rocking hundreds of boats that come | try. One red-hot rock, weighing four or five tons, up from Sorrento and Amalfi and other towns | was thrown three miles! The pillar of smoke that went up from the summit was two miles high, and spread out over the sea like a huge umbrella, hiding the sun and making it dark as midnight at noonday in Naples. When the eruption was over it was found that the whole top of the mountain had been blown away, and that a crater three miles in circumference and two thousand feet deep had been formed by the action of the internal fires!

Half way up the mountain we came to the river of fire. There had been an eruption a few months before, and this was one branch of the great stream that had boiled over the rim of the crater. It had cooled so that we could walk upon it, but it was filled with the fruit. I think that I never before or still smoking and too hot to hold our hands in the crevices. We felt it warming up our feet and risping the soles of our boots. It was a stream wider and deeper than the Mississippi! Think of it—a red-hot river of molten rock flowing down the mountain, sweeping everything before itwidening and spreading till the whole mountain side—the vineyards, the trees, the towering pines, the earth itself—is ablaze! Think how it must furnace in a great iron-foundry! It had changed in color from the red-hot glow to a darkish brown. This was the lava; but as we approached the top we came to the cinders—dry, light pieces of lava brutal fellows a crack on the head. The Society for as large as peas or coarse gravel, that were blown the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals will find out by the steam into the air and had fallen around the cone. It is hard work to climb to the top over the cinders; but we leave our horses at the bottom, and after much puffing and sweating, reach the woods; Cubs Games; Ladies' Boxes; Money Boxes; Opera summit. A CUP OF COLD WATER, AND ITS REWARD .- A young Englishwoman was sent to France to be educated in a Huguenot school in Paris. A few evenings before the fatal massacre of St. Bartholomew's day, she and some of her young companions were taking a walk in some part of the town where there were sentinels placed—perhaps on the walls; and you know that when a soldier is on guard he must not leave his post until he is relieved, that is, till another soldier comes to take his place. One of the soldiers, as the young ladies passed him, besought them to have the charity to bring him a offended at the man for presuming to speak to them -all but the young Englishwoman, whose compassion was moved, and who, leaving her party,
