Heavier the cross, the better Christian; This the touchstone God applies. How many a garden would be wasting, Unwet by showers from weeping eyes! The gold by fire is purified;

The Christian is by trouble tried. Heavier the cross, the stronger faith, The loaded palm strikes deeper root;

The vine juice sweetly issucth When men have pressed the clustered fruit And courage grows where dangers come, Like pearls beneath the salt sea-foam.

Heavier the cross, the heartier prayer; The bruised reeds most fragrant are If sky and wind were always fair, The sailor would not watch the star: And David's Psalms had ne'er been sung If grief his beart had never wrung.

Heavier the cross, the more aspiring; From vales we climb to mountain-crest; The pilgrim, of the desert tiring, Longs for the Cannan of his rest. The dove has here no rest in sight, And to the ark she wings her flight.

Heavier the cross, the easier dying ; Death is a friendlier face to see; To life's decay one bids defying, From life's distress one then is free. The cross sublimely lifts our faith To Him who triumphed over death.

Thou Crucified, the cross I carry, The longer may it dearer be; And less I faint while here I tarry, Implant thou such a heart in me, That faith, hope, love, may flourish there, Till for the cross my crown I wear. -From the German.

"What does Uncle John mean by such queer speeches," said Rose, throwing down her croquet mallet and hurrying up the broad piazza steps with her sister. "I thought he was reading the evening paper."

"Its real mean to say that we would slander our dear, beautiful, precious mamma; and that when she is so sick in the hot city, and we having such a powerful glass, he looked carefully and steadily a splendid time in the country. You make me feel like crying, Uncle John!"

"Well, Ella, you and Rosa have made me feel like crying for two bours. It's your turn now." Seeing the children speechless and flushed with amazement, Uncle John, who had added the care f his only sister's little girls to that of his own coming, cried out; family for a summer in the country, took Ella on his knee and motioned Rosa by his side.

Ella looked angry and pouting, and said, "How could you say I slander my darling mamma, Uncle

They did not seem to notice me, and I doubt whether I should have overheard a syllable, so engrossed was I with my papers, had they not touched me on a very tender point. I never could, from a boy, hear one word against my sister Fanny, much less you."

"Oh, Uncle, they didn't speak against our mamma," exclaimed Rosa, in a tone of horror. "Listen children; I overheard these words: 'Who are those two in white, with blue sashes and wavy hair? They look like twins, except that one has dark eyes.' "' They are not twins,' was the reply; 'the one

All that is not accomplished without the expenditure of thought and energy. Now, if their mother was a woman who took half as much pains to give them the 'ornament of a meek and quiet spirit' as she does--'

" 'That one in the striped blue cambric does her mother great credit,' interrupted another voice. 'She rooms in Ninety-Four, next to mine. Her mother is shut up with a sick baby; but, having given her right principles, need not watch her. See how kind she is to that bashful child in the travelling dress that came in on the boat with your party. Mark my word, you are rarely deceived in judging the mother by the child. 'Children

"Why ! uncle!" and the tears came freely to the eyes of both the children for they loved their mother tenderly; "all the girls here cheat at croquet, and if you play perfectly fair, the way mamma showed us, you'll always be beat. Marie says that is the old fashioned way."

"Well, then, be beat! Suppose I should say that New York is full of dishonest men, everybody cheats, and I can't make a living it I'm honest. Besides, I heard somebody say that perfect honesty is old fashioned. How would that sound?" "Not much like our dear Uncle John," sobbed

By this time the two girls were weeping violently, not only at the new view of their guilt that Uncle John exhibited to them as he went on with his lecture, but with genuine grief to think that 60 boxes Tobacco, etc. For sale by they had made strangers think illy of their mother, who was lying sick at home. As they sobbed, "Oh dear! oh dear! and our mamma so sweet and good and patient; what shall we do, uncle?" He was glad that the piazza was quite deserted by the out driving, or sailing; or as he afterward said, he babes in the wood.

From that day there was a marked change in Rosa and Ella. The lesson learned that sad afternoon was never forgotten, partly because Uncle John took more pains to guide and watch them, and Aunt Julia, who had spent most of her time TO THE PUBLIC OF THE BRITISH PROVINCES driving out, or napping, and chatting, and learning new Afghan stitches among the ladies, felt reproved by the comments of the strangers. The sudden departure of Marie, the French maid. who had been faultless in the arrangement of the toilette of the little girls, and the substitution of one who believed in the old fashioned virtue of honesty in playing croquet and all other matters, may have assisted the reformation. The ladies, whose conversation opened Uncle John's eyes as well as cars, left the hotel early next morning. They will always think of Ella and Rosa as the children of a selfish, unprincipled mother.

Are any of the young readers of the Observer these little girls did? As you have frolicked on the lawn and piazza, or rambled on the beach and the summer months, have people said, "That little girl does her mother credit," or have they said, "I've a poor opinion of that child's mother."
