THE REFUGE.

O Lord ! how happy is the time When in thy love I rest,-When from my weariness I climb Even to thy tender breast ! The night of sorrow endeth there,-Thou art brighter than the sun ; And in thy pardon and thy care The heaven of heaven is won.

Let the world call herself my foe, Or let the world allure; I care not for the world--I go To this dear friend and sure. And when life's fiercest storms are sent Upon life's wildest sea, My little bark is confident, Because it holds by thee.

When the law threatens endless death Upon the awful hill, Straightway from her consuming breath My soul goes higher still-Goeth to Jesus, wounded, slain, And maketh him her home, Whence he will not go out again, And where death can not come.

I do not fear the wilderness Where thou hast been before-Nay, rather will I daily press After thee, near thee, more. Thou art my food ; on thee I lean ; Thou makest my heart sing ; And to thy heavenly pastures green All thy dear flock dost bring.

And if the gate that opens there Be dark to other men, It is not dark to those who share The heart of Jesus then. That is not losing much of life Which is not losing thee, Who art as present in the strife As in the victory.

Therefore how happy is the time When in thy love I rest-When from my weariness I climb Even to thy tender breast ! The night of sorrow endeth there-Thou art brighter than the sun bows a-starboard, and the frowning rocks are left behind. Life and death hung on the quick, prompt an escape !

How did it happen ? Why this sudden and unlooked for danger? Was the pilot asleep at his post? No. Was the light in the binnacle out? No. Did he keep his eye on the compass? Did he faithfully follow his leadings? Yes. Could the compass itself have been in the wrong? Ah, that was the trouble; there was the secret which put this great ship, with its valuable cargo, into such imminent peril.

During her stop at Halifax, the binnacle had needed tightening, and the men who were employed to do the work put in an iron instead of a brass bolt. It was a great mistake, for the iron had attracted the needle of the compass, so that it no longer pointed right, and became untrustworthy. It was diverted, to be sure, but a little, just a little, a very little from the true way; yet that very little at the outset of the voyage told slowly but surely upon the steamer's course. She was in the wrong, and whether much or little, she was wrong. Instead of heading out toward the wide, clearocean, where the pilot thought she was going, she was heading straight toward the shore, straight on to the rocks, straight on to destruction; and it all arose from taking a wrong start at Halifax. The fact is both steamer and sailor must begin right in order to keep right. And so it was with us all, boys. Twenty years ago a bright young man started for an education in the academy. We recommended him to the principal, and when we met the principal, a year "afterward, we expected to hear an excellent account of him. It soon was plain, the gentleman did not rate him very highly. How was that? He began by adroitly deceiving his teachers about his lessons, using "keys" to study with instead of his brains. "It is a wrong start," said the principal, shaking his head. "A mistake, certainly," we said. "A fatal mistake, as regards moral character," repeated the gentleman. And so it proved. Within a year he had been exposed for fraud and corruption,

r some years, and in many ways, been most corrupt; and it may be that the Pills and Ointment were not prered with that care I have always desired.

Those who do not wish to be deceived by buying spuous medicines, which are now likely to emanate from he States or elsewhere, but to possess themselves of the enuine Holloway's Pills and Ointment, manufactured by me in London, England, will do well to see that each pot and box bears the British Government stamp, on which is engraved the words "HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND DINTMENT," and that the address on the label 18 533, OX-FORD STREET, LONDON, where only they are manufactured, and in no other part of the world. The retail prices are on the labels in British currency, and not in
