Weary, in life's stormy battle, When the winds were raging high, I have heard the roar and rattle, And the tempest howling by : Bowed, as bends the rush of summer By the brooklet in the vale, Bowed, as bows the drooping willow

At the fury of the gale ; I have felt the balmy sweetness, I have known the certain witness, When my soul hath taken refuge, Refuge 'neath the grateful covert, Covert of the blessed cross.

Other hopes have often left me, Others promises were vain, And the heavens seemed brass above me, That were full of of gentle rain; I have fondly looked for morning, Through the darkness of the night,

But its glory seemed to linger, Fearful shadows dimmed my sight; But a calm and sudden glory, Lingered round the precious story, And a fairer light than morning Glimmered in the sacred dawning, Drawing off the blessed cross.

I have seen the Christian hero, In the midst of worldly strife, O'er the din of earnest conflict, Wave the tailsman of life; I have seen him on the mountain, In the valley, dark and low, With his ensign raised above him, Singing to the victory go;

Lo, the heavy showers parted, And the victor, joyous hearted, Entered at the shining portal Ot the mansion all immortal, Waving still the blessed cross.

Thus I tread the gloomy valley, Thus I leave this heavy dross, Trusting to his hope and comfort, Clinging to the blessed cross; As the earth is growing darker, Gathering shadows of the night, All along the swelling river, Gleams this messenger of ligh

So, upon my rapturous vision, Burst the hills of my elysian, And the anthems of the angels, Floating in their sweet evangels, Magnify the blessed cross.

UNFORGOTTEN.

Mrs.--- was well known among all her circle as an excellent housekeeper. Her attention to the style and elegance which she kept her family was proverbial. Her furniture was the handsomest and most carefully preserved; while the dress of herself, her husband and her children, was always in the newest fashion and in the most perfect order.

But it was the will of Providence to call this model house-wife from the head of her family; and the tremendous loss her death would be to the bereaved husband and children, was the theme of every tongue. Aunts, uncles and cousins were constantly bemoaning, in the children's ears, the mother who could never be replaced to them.

At last, one day, about three months after her death, a lady visitor, who had asked to see the children, in expressing the usual condolence, remarked: "But you can never forget your dear mamma; her loss will be present to you every day of your lives." The response, however, was different from what the speaker expected.

"No, we'll never forget her," said the eldest girl, nervously. "She was always dressed so fine that she wouldn't allow us to touch her; and she was so particular about the parlors that we daren't set a foot in them. Then our clothes were so very nice that we weren't let play for fear of spoiling them; and it was 'hush, hush, go up to the nursery,' if we only opened our lips. No, the babies may forget mamma, but we, bigger ones, never can."

Astonishment fell upon the company. That the little girl's speech was dictated by neither love nor reverence for the departed was plain. Tired of praises with which she did not sympathise, she seized this opportunity of testifying that the fastidious elegance, so much applauded by the world, was not appreciated by the children-had not made their lives happy, and did not sweeten their mo-

Mother, who readest this, if God should call you hence to-morrow, for what qualities would your children remember you? The children above mentioned may never forget their mother's stylish costume; but they have no tender recollections of her clasping their little hands in prayer, or gathering them about her knees for the Scripture story, or the lesson of holy love. They may never forget the rich and tasteful adornments of the house; but they have no sweet memories of it as a home in every part of which their presence was a blessing, They may never forget the dainty care bestowed on their clothing; but they have no fond thoughts of maternal smiles bestowed on their well-doing, always is the safest, best and most agreeable to use or loying rebukes for their little errors. SHE WAS A STRANGER.

A missionary was requested to go out to a new settlement to address a Sabbath-school. He had preached in the morning, and was wearied and felt quite unfitted for the task, but reluctantly consented to go.

When he found himself at the spot, he looked around the assembly with great misgivings, not knowing what to say to them. He noticed a little girl, shabbily dressed and barefooted, shrinking in the corner, her little sunburnt face buried in her hands, the tears trickling beneath her small brown fingers, and sobbing as if her heart would break. Soon, however, another little girl, about eleven years old got up and went to her, whispered kindly to her, and taking her by the hand, led her towards a brook, then seated her on a log, and kneeling beside her, she took off her ragged sunbonnet, and dipping her hand in the water, bathed her hot eyes and tear-stained face, and smoothed the tangled hair, talking in a cheery manner all the while.

The little one brightened up, the tears all went, and smiles came creeping around the rosy mouth, The missionary stepped forward and said: "Is that your little sister, my dear?"

where she came from, I never saw her before." "Then how came you to take her out and have such a care for her, if you do not know her?" " Because she was a stranger, sir, and seemed all alone, and needed somebody to be kind to her." "Ah!" said the missionary to himself, "here is a text for me to preach from: 'Because she was a stranger and seemed all alone, and needed somebody to be kind to her.' " The words came to him: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." So, taking the little girls by the hand, he went back to the school-room, and told the people all should bear to one another, even as the dear low estate, making them his peculiar care. The missionary forgot his weariness, and felt that God had put a good word in his mouth. - Exchange.

CAUTION!! CAUTION!!! TO THE PUBLIC OF THE BRITISH PROVINCES OF NORTH AMERICA.

I beg most respectfully to acquaint the public of the British North American Provinces, that in May, 1871, I caused the business at 80, Maiden Lane, New York, for the simple story; then spoke of the great love that | the sale of Holloway's Pills and Ointment, which were, up to that time, prepared by William Brown, now sed, to be closed. Mutual Companies MAY not need to use this extra thirty per cent.; in that case it is returned to the Policy-holder and mis-called a "Dividend." The Nationa does not need any extra guarantee, its capital being sufficient, and consequently its rates are from 25 to 30 per cent. lower than those of Mutual Companies.
