THE MISSIONARY'S LIFE-HYMN.

THY WORK, O GOD, IS MINE To live and work for Thee Me Thou dost send Amidst earth's ruins. May I be, Unto the end

A living sacrifice. My store

Is Thine-not mine-for evermore. Thy work, O God, is mine

Daily to do;

My work, O God, is Thine While I pursue The path in which my Saviour trod,

In sunshine, or beneath Thy rod. With Thee to guide aright I fear no foe; Nor, in the darkest night,

Refrain to go Where'er Thy voice is heard to call, For Thou encirclest, rulest all. What though my passions rage,

The warfare which I wage Knows no defeat, The conquering power is on my side

While I in Jesus' love abide. If, till I reach the end Of life's short day, I must the truth defend 'Gainst error's sway, O! let Thy Spirit on my sight

And urge retreat,

Pour forth His beams of heavenly light. Then, when death's icy hand Shall touch my heart,

I must depart, Let the dismissal, Lord, to me Be but the entrance hour with The.

And from life's weary strand

SAVED AT THE BRIDGE.

As Homer Hall leaned over the side of the bridge, and looking into the water, he was in deep, thought. An autumn haze was upon the country far and near, and the images of the green and brown trees were | iron, copper, and brass, indigo, wax, hams, musical lying by the shore, almost as clear and bright as the trees above them whose pictures they were. about in the still water, and thought to himself. | tallow, and cattle. He turned and saw an old gentleman, who he remembered hearing his father | ware, earthenware, cutlery, iron, steel, metallic say was his Sunday-school teacher when he was a wares, salt, coal, watches, tin, silks, and linens. boy. The old man was not a Sunday-school teacher now, but he loved children as much as ever he per, linseed, lard, hides, wax, duck, cordage, brisdid; and Homer liked him because he once taught his father in the Sunday-school. "What were you thinking of, Homer?" asked fruits, quicksilver, sulphur, corn, saffron, anchovies, the gentleman. Homer told him he had been wondering how he should feel if he had been born a fish. "I never was a fish," said the old man, " so I | ered ware, and morocco. cannot tell you. But I will tell you what happened once on this bridge, at the very place where we now stand. The account I give you is a true one, for I saw it myself. "This river, that now runs along smoothly, was, at the time of which I speak, eight or ten feet higher than it now is, on account of a heavy rain and the melting snows, for it was in the rainy month of cigars, mahogany, dye woods, coffee, pimento, fresh ing uprooted trees, logs, lumber and fences, and we

He had his horse tied near by, and was watching with oth- produce, cotton, tobacco, flour, provisions of all ers a piece of raft that was coming down above them. On the bit of raft sat a man, or what seem- Age. ed to be a man holding on for life. As soon as Mr. McQueen saw by his motions that it was really a man, and not a bunch of clothes, he ran towards his horse, leaped into the saddle, and cried out, 'I'll save him !"

"How could he save him on horseback ?" said Homer, "I think he could have helped him better with a boat."

"No, Homer; not a boat could have lived in that freshet; the waters were too wild, and the danger of being jammed and crushed with the floating timbers was too great. Mr. McQueen knew that the raft might at any moment go to pieces, and the man be lost.

"His horse flew like the wind towards this bridge. What the rider feared was that the torrent, which rushed along so fast, might bring the man beneath the bridge quite as soon as he himself should reach it. When he came to the entrance of the bridge, where many men were standing, he of Crawford. Lawyers said his claim was good, called out, 'Bring a rope, quick ?' "A rope was soon brought, and given to Mr. Mc-

Queen. He ran on the bridge, and seeing the raft coming, with the man still on it, he had time to put himself in what seemed to him the right place. He lowered the rope till it about touched water, but that real nobility of action. Contrast this possible it required much skill to let it down at the exact point at which the poor man would come.

was near enough, for he was now so near that every body expected the next moment to see him shot under the bridge by the swift tide.

"The man had but a moment to think what it was best for him to do. He saw the rope before him, and thought he could get hold of it; but he was not quite certain of that. If he should try to take hold of the rope, he must let go the raft, and give up all hopes of being saved in any other way except by the rope. But what if he should miss the rope? He would fall into the river and be drowned. If he should wait a while to think about it, it would be too late. The poor man did not delay, but made up his mind to try the rope. A moment more and his chance would be gone enthrough the air.

"He let go the raft just at the right moment, threw up both of his hands, caught the end of the rope, and held on to it; and right heartily did five or six men on the bridge lay hold of it and draw him up. And when he was seen to be safe. loud cheers for him were given by the men on the bridge and the crowd on the shore."

"I think I feel it, sir," said Homer. "To escape from the danger that must follow if we die in our sins we must look to the way God has made for us. This way is through Christ. If we believe upon him with all our hearts we shall be saved. Faith is sometimes laying hold upon Christ Jesus. But we cannot lay hold of him unless we let other things go. We must let go all SALMODY, Sunday School Libraries, Packages San hope of being saved in any other way except by Christ alone. If we think that being children of the church, or of pious parents, will save us, we must let that go too. And we must take hold of Christ with all our hearts."

"I think I understand it, sir," said Homer. "And then, Homer, as to the time when we are to believe in Christ to escape the danger I spoke of, when should that be?"

"Right away," said Homer.

"Yes, right away. You see if the man had waited, it would have been too late. To him it was 'now or never.' So it often is with those who see their duty, but have not made up their minds to do it. Jesus Christ offers himself to us now, and to all who are asking what to do, or when to believe, he is like the rope to the man in the river. Now is the time for every man who feels his danger, and wishes to be saved. If he gives himself up to Jesus Christ now, and lets go all other saviours he will be saved; but if not, it may be forever too late."-Young Folks' News.

> CHURNS! CHURNS! CHURNS! HEALTH! TIME! MONEY! WHY SHOULD I BUY KITCHEN'S PATENT CHURN ? BECAUSE they preserve health, save time, save money, and the churning is all done in 5 or 10 minutes. You will then believe what I assure you is true, viz.; That I Patent Rotary Double Dasher. This churn has two Dashers, each revolving in an opposite direction. It is useless to attempt a description of this churn in an advertisement, it has to be seen to be appreciated. It is estimated by practical farmers that it will produce one-tenth more butter from the same quantity of cream than any other
