WHAT DOES IT MATTER?

It matters little where I was born, Or if my parents were rich or poor; Whether they shrank at the cold world's scorn, Or walked in the pride of wealth secure. But whether I live an honest man, And hold my integrity firm in my clutch, I tell you, my brother, as plain as I can, It matters much.

It matters little how long I stay In a world of sorrow, sin and care; Whether in youth I am called away, Or live till my bones of flesh are bare. But whether I do the the best I can To soften the weight of adversity's touch On the faded cheeks of my fellow-man, It matters much.

It matters little where be my grave, Or on the land or on the sea; By purling brook or neath stormy wave, It matters little or naught to me. But whether the angel of death comes down And marks my brow with a loving touch, As one that shall wear a victor's crown,

It matters much.

THE BABY'S RESCUE.

Far up among the White Mountains, in New Hampshire, in a tiny shining lake, the Saco finds its source. Up there the river is hardly more than a brooklet, trickling down its rocky bed, but it grows larger and stronger as it winds along between the mountains, and after a while becomes a dashing stream, tambling over the little stones in its way, and eddying around the large ones in frothy circles. The valley where it rises is so narrow that there is only room for a road and the little river between the mountains. And it is three miles from the spot where the Saco starts on its journey to the sea, before it passes a single house.

Often in Winter time, this valley is filled with snow which drifts so deep that it is sometimes six weeks or two months before the few inhabitants can communicate with each other. You would imthere was almost no land to till, and where the road was nearly impassible half the year, that few people would be living; and it is so. Here and there where the mountains seem to stand, somewhat further apart, and where it is possible to squeeze out an acre or two of arable land, there is a small farmhouse and barn. But the houses are scattered and few, till the river has wound along twelve or fifteen

On the left bank of the Saco, close to the river's edge, is a little white house, surrounded by a few acres of farming land. It is the home of Rueben Truesdale, his wife, and four children. They are quite poor, and work hard, as most New England farmers have to do. There are not more than half a dozen acres to cultivate: but Reuben does a little shoe-making, harness-mending, and odd jobs of carpentering for his neighbors-everybody is a neighbor there who lives within a dozen miles-to eke out a living for his family. His oldest boy, named after him, is about fourteen, and is a bright, enerboyish good sense. The next one, Bennie, is ten the third Tim is nearly six. But the darling of the household is the baby girl, Lucy. Lucy is the curling in dainty rings all over her head, and laughing eyes that dance under their long, even lashes.

It is about her I want to tell you, and the startling adventure she had when she was only a year old. She is the pet, and plaything, and comforter of the whole family. When her mother is worn out with the house-work, and the farm-work, which is her share, when the boys have torn their clothes worse than usual, or been guilty of some uncommon degree of mischief- for Reubbie, and Bennie, and Tim are very human boys, and constantly get into mischief-then baby Lucy is her solace and recreation. Her mother, sitting down in the old-fashioned wooden-rocking chair, takes Lucy in her arms, and soon forgets that she is not a city lady with plenty of servants at her beck. When her father comes in late from work, tired and drooping, the glad little cry of "Papa, papa!" brings back the smile to his lips, the hope to his heart. If the boys get angry with each other and begin to quarrelas boys will, you know—a tearful "Bubber!" from frightened Lucy dispels the storm, and Reubbie or Bennie catches her up in his arms with a tender, brotherly kiss, which seems to say, "For your sake, little darling, I'll forgive him."

One day last September, as Reubbie came out of the barn, he noticed a large dark, threatening cloud hanging over the mountains, and even shrouding their summits in its soft blackness. He said to his mother, as he entered the house, "I guess we are going to get a pretty hard storm, mother, to-night or to-morrow. I'd better go down cellar and see that the windows are fast."

"Yes," answered his mother, "the wind is beginning to blow a perfect gale. I shouldn't wonder if it were the equinoctial. Any how, it is going to be a severe storm, and I'll run up stairs and look to the windows; and I wish you'd go up garret and see if the roof is tight. If it isn't you'll have to stuff something into the holes, for I don't expect father home to-night.'

Mr. Truesdale often stayed over night when he went to help a neighbor very far away. This time he had gone to a "barn raising," and intended to return next day.

All at one came a tremendous blast, and running down stairs, what terrible sight do you think Mrs. Truesdale beheld?

The cradle, with baby Lucy in it, floating out of the door, which had blown open, and through which the water was pouring!

The poor mother screamed with horror as she saw her darling snatched away by the water, and I springing toward the door, tried in vain to reach the cradle. Little Lucy sat up smiling as if she enjoyed the fun of such an unprecedented adventure. But the frantic mother was not the only one who had seen the tiny craft swept out upon the boiling river. Reubbie had followed his mother down stairs, and taken in the danger at a glance, dashed past her, but he could not reach the cradle. It had fairly started on the current of the river.

"O," cried Reubbie, "what can I do?" as he paused panic-stricken for an instant. Then whirling round, he tore open the barn door, dragged the horse from the stall, mounted him, and set off down the river bank. The rain by this time had ceased; but the wind still blew in gusts, and shook the cradle fiercely, as it swept beyond Reubbie on, on, on down the foaming river. The lad dashed on across fences, through water, through mud through and over anything and everything which kept him from

"If I can only get ahead of the cradle," said Reubbie to himself, "I'm all right." But the little craft kept either ahead of or so close to him, that he dared not stop lest it should be swept beyond his reach forever.

"Oh," cried Reubbie, as his task seemed almost hopeless, "if some branch or bough would only stop it one minute, I could save our darling baby,' On, on, on the cradle was carried always beyond Reubbie's reach. The boy strove to whistle to Lucy to keep the child from being frightened at her novel situation, though she was too young to realize any of the danger. And Reubbie almost screamed to see the innocent little thing trying to put her tiny hands over the sides of the cradle into the water. At last, after this awful chase had lasted nearly half an hour-it seemed to Reubbie half a day at least he saw a tree lying prostrate almost in the middle of the river. Praying silently but fervently that God would spare the life of their darling little sister, he urged on the old Gray to his utmost speed, managed to pass the cradle-boat, sprang off the horse, seized the branch of a tree that had been broken by the wind, and began to wade toward the old tree where the cradle had finally lodged between the boughs. The river usually isn't more than a foot or two deep at that place; but that day it was so high that Reubbie could scarcely force himself along. Once the cradle was dislodged, and the boy thought it was out of his reach forever. But it caught again and after a final effort Reubbie snatched his sister to his breast. The poor, little, wet thing had ceased to smile long before; but when Reubbie folded his arms around her, she gave one delighted chirrup and cuddled up to him as closely as her little remaining strength would allow. Reubbie fought his way back to where old Gray was panting on the bank, mounted again and rode home with baby in his arms.

You should have seen Bennie and Tim caper, and the tearful thanksgiving of their mother, as Lucy was handed in from the top of the woodshed through the second-story window.

By the time baby and Reubbie had been warmed and covered with dry clothing, and old Gray had been cared for, Mr. Truesdale reached home the storm having prevented his coming earlier in the day. You can imagine how terrible it was to him to hear of his darling's peril; and after he had breathed a prayer of thanksgiving to him who getic lad with little education, but a great deal of notes the sparrow's fall, he said to Reubbie, laying his hands affectionately on his son's head: "My boy, whatever you are as a man, however great and good you become, I shall never be so proud of you prettiest little thing you ever saw, with bright hair as I am at this moment. God bless you, my son, God bless you always!"-Lilian G. Browne, in

STEPPING IN FATHER'S FOOTSTEPS.

One bright winter's morning after a snow-storm a father took his hat for a walk to attend to some farm affairs requiring his attention. As he started, his little boy of five summers also snatched his hat, and followed the father with mock dignity, and an assumed business like air. When they reached the door, the gentleman noticed that no track or pathway had been made in the snow, and he hesitated about letting his boy follow him. But the soft, fleecy snow looked so tempting, so pearly white, that he concluded to allow the child to walk after him. He took long and rapid strides through the untrodden snow, when, suddenly remembering his "little boy," he paused, looking back for him, he exclaimed:

walk in this deep snow?" "Oh! no," said the boy, "I'm coming; for, father, I step in all your tracks."

"Well, my son, don't you find it hard work to True enough, the dear child was planting his tiny feet just where the parent's had trodden. The child's reply startled the father, as he reflected that thus would his child keep pace with him, and follow in his tracks through life. He was not a friend to Jesus, not a man of prayer, and not a Christian; and well might he pause and tremble as he thought of his child, ever striving "to step in all his tracks" onward, onward, through life's mysterious mazes and myths, toward eternity! The little boy's reply brought that strong, stubborn-hearted man to think when even the preached word of God had made no impression upon him. Finally he repented, and sought and found peace in believing in Christ. We believe he is now making such tracks through life that at some day that son may be proud to say : Father, I step in all your tracks."-British Work-

THE NATIONAL Life Insurance Company

OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AS Chartered by Congress, in 1868, with a capital of hich was paid in before commencing business This capital is four times as large as that of any American company doing a Life Insurance business exclusively Beside this immense capital, the Company have invested premium reserve to meet maturing Policies of seven indred and sixty-six thousand dollars, making their total assets to January 1st, 1881, one million seven hundred and sixty-six thousand dollars. Their liabilities to same date were $807,389, or in other words, they have more than two dollars assets for every dollar of liabilities. This success is owing to the facts that their business is conducted upon the only common sense plan-"so much insurance for so much money"-and that the Company's financial manage ment has been economical and cautious. In this Company there are none of the bewildering unertainties and disappointments of "notes," "dividends, &c., &c., &c., which enter so largely into the busine lans of Mutual Companies. The insured buy what they pay for-Insurance. They are not called upon to insure hers, but they are insured by the Company. Instead of charging thirty per cent. more than is neces extra thirty per cent.; in that ease it is returned to the Policy-holder and mis-called a "Dividend." The National does not need any extra guarantee, its capital being suficient, and consequently its rates are from 25 to 30 per ent. lower than those of Mutual Companies. The National's Policies are more liberal than any issued the Provinces, allowing residence or travel anywhere in perate climates. No extra Premiums, Policy-fees, ermits, or extra charges, except upon the half-dozen ocpations generally recognized as EXTRA hazardous.

The National is the only Company which has made the uired deposit at Ottawa for the SOLE benefit of Canadian olicy-holders. All others are for "Policy-holders Five cents per day will insure a young man a thousand dollars, in Gold, payable to him at the age of sixty, or to his representatives should he die sooner. Four cents a day will insure a man, aged 25, for one thousand dollars, payable to his wife or children at his death, wherever that ay occur. What easier way is there to make such a prorision? SPEIGHT'S PATENT DESIDERATUM GLUE POT. TT has hitherto been found in using any of the Domestic Glue Pots now before the public, that they have genrally caused disappointment, for the Flue as soon as sufciently heated, as speedily becomes chilled, owing to the cooling of the small quantity of water which can be used in melting the Glue. This inconvenience is avoided in the use of "SPEIGHT'S PATENT DESIDERATUM GLUE POT," where the Family Night Light not only dissolves the Glue, but will keep it in a hot and liquid state for several hours, and the necessity and manifest inconver ience is therefore obviated of having to place the Glue Pot on the bars of a hot grate or over a gas jet, as has been sually recommended, and is absolutely necessary in the ase of any other Glue Pot. Another great improvement is the inner cup of porcelain which can be at any time removed for cleaning, and will be found equally useful for dissolving Gum, Isinglass, Gelatine, or any other adhesive agent.

The advantage of having a Glue Pot, the separate parts f which can be removed and cleaned, and when neces ary renewed, is sufficient alone to recommend the article public use, and altogether will be found of a character mensely superior to any other of the Domestic Glue Pots hitherto supplied, and will be admitted as a DESIDE-RATUM IN EVERY HOUSEHOLD, SHOP, OR COUNTING HOUSE.
