BUILT UPON A ROCK. BY MARTIN LUTHER.

My anchor is within the vail; Whatever may my soul betide, Against me nothing can prevail, For God the Lord is on my side: Though heaven and earth shall pass away, My trust shall still unshaken stay.

The Rock of truth I now have found, Here shall I ever stand secure; I safely anchor in the ground That shall forevermore endure : When all the things of earth are fled, With joy shall I lift up my head. Nor waves nor storms can bring me harm,

While on this Rock I place my trust; My strength is the Almighty arm-The shield and refuge of the just; Here shall I dwell, and dwell serene, Amid life's every chequered scene.

Though fiends of hell against me rise,

Their looks of wrath 1 will not fear; While on the Lord my soul relies, He shall for my defence appear: He is my fortress and high tower, My helper in the evil hour.

My house I build upon this rock, Which shall forever be my stay; To fire, nor flood, nor tempest shock, Shall its foundation e'er give way; But here shall stand forever fast, . Long as eternity shall last.

INSTINCT OF THE BEAVER.

A letter from Ottawa, to the Concord Patriot, relating to the lumber trade of Canada, interlines the following sketch:

'I started with a trap and an axe for a beaver dam about three miles from the depot. It was in early winter, and only about six inches of snow was on the ground. By following a blaze made on the previous day, I soon got in close vicinity to the dam. When I got within a hundred yards of it, the snow began to look as if it had been firmly trodden down, and was covered with a coating of ice. Stumps of small bushes protruded in every direction, and were cut off close to the ground as neatly as though done with a knife. Previous to the freezing over of the pond the beavers cut down every small bush near by and drag it to the pond, where they fasten them on the bottom to serve as provision during the winter. All birch trees, too, upon the edge of the pond, are cut down so as to fall into the water. They also serve as provision. The instinct of the beaver in selecting and cutting down these trees is wonderful; it is rarely a tree is seen which tell away from the pond, instead of into it. As they come out of the water upon the snow, the water dripping from their bodies as they crawl along, and their heavy tails, shaped like towels, dragging after them, beats the snow down compactly and covers it with a coating of ice. As I could see the stumps of numerous trees near by Drew, one day; "and I shall name them, 'Half which had been recently cut down, and close to me Done.' 'Almost done,' and 'Done.' Jasper slunk the trees was about eighteen inches in diameter, ing, he thought of his martinhouse, begun as soon

"Mean you for what?" as I was watching the opening, I saw a train of asked her mother. "For Almost Done," said Lucy, bubbles moving along under the ice, and before I blushing. "I was almost done dressing when divined the meaning, the thin ice broke upwards, breakfast was ready. I was almost to school when and the head of a large beaver popped out. It it began. I had almost done my letter to papa was a perfect surprise party for us both, and for a when it was time to send it. I had almost finished few seconds we stared at each other with open Golden Threads' when Jane came for it. O dear!" mouths, and then, without stopping to say "good- | sighed Lucy. "Almost Done is quite as bad as bye," the beaver disappeared. WHAT FOR?

A gentleman went into a Sunday-school not long , ago, and said to the children, "There are two questions I want to ask you. One of them you can all answer; the other, I do not know whether you can made you?"

When the gentleman asked this, the children looked around at him and then at each other, as they answered, "God," as if they hardly knew how to answer such an easy question, or why he should ask it. The second question was "What for?" Could you have told him? Do you know why God made you?

"DOES GOD EVER SCOLD?"

"Mother," said a little girl, "does God ever scold?" She had seen her mother, under circumstances of strong provocation, lose her temper, and give way to the impulse of passion; and pondering thoughtfully for a moment, she asked:

"Mother, does God ever scold?" The question was so abrupt and startling that it arrested the mother's attention almost with shock; and she asked:

hurts me, even if I feel I have done wrong, and it don't seem to me that I could love God very much if he scolded." The mother felt rebuked before her simple child.

Never before had she heard so forcible a lecture on the evils of scolding. The words of the child sank deep into her heart, and she turned away from the innocent face of her little one to hide the tears that gathered to her eyes. Children are quick observers; and the child, seeing the effect of her words, eagerly inquired-"Why do you cry, mother, was it naughty for

"No, my child, don't say that," said the mother, unable to keep back her tears, as she felt how her tones had repelled her little one from her heartand the child wondering what so affected her parent, but intuitively feeling it was a case requiring sympathy, reached up and throwing her arms about her mother's neck, whispered-
