STEWARDSHIP.

Poetry.

BY REV. JAMES UPHAM, D. D. No beggar is thy God ; He needs no aid Poor child of clay! The world's vast wealth, created by a word,

Is his to-day. Yea, but a word, and other worlds shall fill

The space afar, Beyond where light has failed, with tired wings, From furtherest star.

Think not to bribe a place in God's esteem

With gift of gold, E'en though thy gift should hungry thousands feed From stores untold;

Or structures rear, and every chair endow, For learning's use;

Or Gospel heralds to the heathen send, Their bonds to loose.

God gives the work thy character to test, Or mould complete :

•Tis love, and faith, and faithfulness He seeks-All else is cheat.

The love He asks is Godward, manward, too,-The twain are one:

Take heed, lest thine be sheerest love of self. Or be undone.

"Tis faith in God and all that God hath spoke-A faith in works;

"Tis faith in Christ as Saviour, Teacher, King, Nor service shirks.

"Tis faithfulness from faith, nor less from love, To God and man; "Tis faith and love co-working out in act,

Where'er it can.

Dost thou bring much, and yet keep back a part? 'Tis worse than nought : 'Tis not the smile of thy approving Lord,-

Mere name is sought.

Hast but a mite to bring, and bringest that? With God 'tis more Than all the millions brought with noise and pomp

From hoarded store.

He in whose eye the millions are as mites On motive looks; Each is a steward of a sacred trust-God keeps the books.

A CROOKED PATH.

One day Archie---'s father sent him on an errand, and as the place to which he was to go was some miles off, he was allowed to have the horse. It was a fine sunny morning, and Archie enjoyed his ride, as you may well suppose. He made the good old horse go fast or slow, just as he liked; spare her blushes. and the spring birds were singing on every tree he passed. His father told him not to stop by the way. So he went and did what he was told to do, and was trotting home with a merry heart, when he caught sight of some boys in a farmyard. He knew them; and what should he do but ride into the yard, just to say "Good morning" to them. The boys were playing at marbles. Archie watched them from the horse's back, until he got so interested that he slipped off the saddle, took his turn in the game, and played, and played again, until two whole hours were gone.

He was quite frightened when he found how much time had passed. He jumped on "Charlie's" back, and away he went. But nothing looked so pleasant as before. The fields were as green, and the sky as blue, and the sun as bright, and the birds as gay; but Archie-he was not as happy. He had stopped by the way, all the while knowing his father was waiting for him.

"O, dear, what excuse can I make?" thought he. "Excuse ?" it might have been replied, "why, none. There is no excuse to make. Speak the truth like an honest fellow." Soon Archie spied perjury. father coming down the road to meet him, afraid least some accident had happened. "I am glad you have reached home safely, my son.
