CHRIST FOR ME.

No Christ for me! the atheist said,
And turned in scorn away;
I saw him on his dying bed,
No radiant light around shed,
For Christ was not his stay.

No Christ for me! in boastful pride—
Life of a giddy throng—
Exclaimed the youth, and turned aside,
And in a brief delirium died,
With curses on his tongue.

No Christ for me! where gold is king,
I heard the miser say—
And as he hugged the glittering thing,
I saw the shadow of a wing,
He passed in gloom away.

No Christ for me! from lips profane,
Rose on the Sabbath air;
Alas! poor soul, the world to gain,
Brought to his heart dismay and pain,
That ended in despair.

No Christ for me! and to his lips
The fatal glass was pressed;
He did not fear the soul's eclipse,
Nor did he see the scorpion whips
That scourged his laboring breast.

No Christ for me! The giddy throng
Shall wrap me in delight,
Amid the festive dance and song,
Where midnight hours the joys prolong—
"Thou fool! thy soul this night."

A Christ for me! with tearful eyes
The pilgrim saint exclaims,
As he lives daily for the skies,
And sparks of pure devotion rise,
And kindle into flames.

A Christ for me! Through life he goes,
With trust and filial fear;
Amid distress or treacherous foes,
Love in his faithful bosom glows;
His friend is always near.

A Christ for me! The Saviour died
To save my soul from death;
His cleansing blood has been applied,
And I can trust in none beside,
The happy saint exulting cries,
With his departing breath.

THE PATRIARCH'S STORY.

BY R. H. CHATG.

I once knew an old man who was looked upon in the community as a sort of old to the machinery of society—a pacifier to the quarrelsome and the fault finding, the peevish, and the cross. Evidently he was one of those good men upon whom heaven has pronounced, "Blessed are the peacemakers," for he could restore that lovely angelic peace to the brawling family or contentious village, as well as to the mind of the crying girl, or to the stubborn boy.

He was so old at this time that his working days were over, and consequently was always on foot, welcome anywhere and everywhere through the village, came in hand and smiling happy face, and a low and kindly word for every one he met. A perfect embodiment of good nature, and a miracle of happiness! None in all the village from earliest recollections had ever known him to be angry—as we used that word. He was the oldest citizen in the place; and had mingled considerably in its affairs when he was in the prime of life, but even then though meeting the roughest classes of his fellowmen, and often provoked to the greatest extreme, even beyond the point of virtuous endurance, if that was possible, he was always civil and respectful to the villager. Neighbors envied him his peaceful mind; and thought that Heaven had certainly been partial to him in bestowing the most desirable gifts. I will never forget his honest confession when closely interrogated on the subject by sincere and wondering admirers.

"I am now an old man," said he, "probably the oldest in the village, and though I never intended to say much to the world in regard to myself, fearing others might think me vain, yet as it may do good to my young friends here to know the secret of my 'happy disposition,' as you are pleased to call it, and as my experience may help them to pass smoothly over many a rough step in the journey of life, I will for once disregard my own feelings on the subject and give them an honest history of the whole matter."

"When I was a very little child, as far back as I can recollect, I was quite delicate in health. Indeed, my parents thought I could not possibly live to manhood, and consequently they wished to make my few days on earth as happy as possible. And so I was made the little pet of the family. As capital to begin with I had an exceedingly undesirable temper. I became peevish and irritable at the merest trifles; was easily offended when no offense was intended. At first my will became the pleasure of every member of a large household, but soon the pleasure became a stern necessity. My elder brothers and sisters yielded to my most unreasonable demands with a promptness and grace that did them credit, and saved many a terrible row at home. They trembled when I got into one of my fits of passion; for you see they thought I had but a few weeks or months to live, and therefore dare not contradict me. On those terrible occasions my poor foolish mother petted me to soothe my fury, but they only served an opposite end, and encouraged the disease to grow more.

"I had grown up to the age of fifteen, and though my health was good then, my temper was tenfold worse. I went to school, but was alone, for no one liked me. The boys avoided me, and the girls were afraid of me. This in no way tended to my improvement. I hated my schoolmates; I hated the teachers; I hated the school! Everybody was wrong, and I was right! All were but me. I quarrelled with my slate, and I quarrelled with my books. I was old enough now to be talked of in the village. People began to say that I would come to no good end. Once I had almost broken a boy's skull with a sharp stone, and it was as much as a dumb brute's life was worth to meet me where I could inflict a blow without being seen. Many of the wise people of the village gravely shook their heads, and expressed a fear that I would end my life on the gallows.

"One day I was digging in the garden, I remember as if it had occurred but yesterday. My mother had a superior taste for cultivating flowers, and had coaxed me that morning to dig for her. She had a large and beautiful garden which might have been a paradise to any other than a demon. I was using a spade at the time, and as usual not in the very best mood. Carelessly, or perhaps, intentionally, I had turned up one of mother's choicest flowers. She saw it, and cried, 'Oh James, see what you have done!' 'I cannot help it,' said I, angrily. 'You must try to help it!' she insisted. This was more than she had ever dared to say to me before, and it drove me into a fit of frenzy. If there is such a thing as a demoniacal possession, this was it. It was a feeling I never had before; and, thank God, never since. Mother came to replace the bulb; as she advanced I trembled with rage, I lost control of myself completely, I raised the spade. There was a fearful struggle in my mind, it lasted only for a moment, but it was a fearful struggle. My mother saw my countenance; she stood and looked me in the face. Oh, what a look of pity! I can never forget it. I was an appeal far beyond words. I was disarmed; I was subdued; I was completely conquered; I threw the spade out of my hands, and rushed into my mother's arms. She kissed me tenderly. She wept over me. I wept as if my heart would break. We prayed together. She knew well what I meant. I had lifted the implement to strike her to the earth in my paroxysm of passion. An act, of course, which would have hurried me to the gallows. And if not, would have broken my heart for ever.

"James," said she, after we had wept for minutes, 'James, whenever you are provoked to anger, always pray to God before you act, and then do the very opposite of what you would wish to do.' "That was my turning point. That cowardly, impious, barbarous act, which would have branded me with a mark worse than Cain's, but which the grace of God prevented by a mother's appealing look was never after thought of but with a shudder; a thrill of horror passes through my soul at the slightest recollection of it.

"I followed closely my mother's advice. My temper was not changed in a minute. Many a long year of hard training had I it; but when in a bad mood I always waited to pray before acting. When insulted, it was my constant care to pray first and then return a kindly answer. To those I hated, I was most civil. Those that insulted me I tried to pray for and love. The village wondered at me, and everybody exclaimed under his breath, 'What a change!' No one knew the cause of it but God and my mother, and myself.

"It is true the change was only outward at first—the bad temper was there still—but it grew weaker. In a few years I could enjoy peace of mind and happiness too, which I never had before. I gained the esteem of those whose confidence I had forfeited. I became a wonder to every body, but most of all to myself. And now to-day, I have no hesitation in saying that the making of my own disposition is very much in our own hands. And I am nothing too severe when I tell you plainly there is no excuse for a bad temper.

"And now, my young friends, you may not have gone just so far in indulging an evil disposition as I have done, but there is the commencement of it in the rude answer, the scowl, and the shrug. Take the advice of an old, old man, who learned it three-quarters of a century ago. Cultivate a good temper in all times and all places, at home and abroad, and rest assured it will blossom into peace and happiness when you are old."

HOME AND FARM.

HINTS ABOUT HOUSES.—Many houses, from the mansion to the cottage, are unwholesome for some of the following reasons:

1. Damp basements.
2. Cesspools and foul drains within the basement.
3. Rotten timber in floors and skirtings and tainted wall-papers.
4. Kitchen sinks in improper places and unventilated.
5. Water-closets in improper places and unventilated.
6. Rooms without adequate means for ventilation.
7. Water-cisterns and pumps in improper places, and so the water is contaminated.

Houses are also unwholesome from personal dirt, personal carelessness and personal neglect. As when:

1. Rooms are not sufficiently cleaned.
2. Carpets are left down too long and never swept.
3. Windows are seldom opened from the top.
4. Closets are dirty, neglected, and without ventilation.
5. Dirty beds are unmade and also shrouded by dirty hangings.
6. Dirty wardrobes and dirty clothes-closets.
7. Nooks, corners and shelves which are never dusted.

Persons who are about to build dwelling-houses should have the following suggestions in mind: The subsoil beneath a house should be naturally dry, or it should be made dry by land draining. The ground-floor of a house should not be below the level of the land, street or road outside. A site excavated on the side of a hill or steep bank is liable to be dangerous. As external ventilation may be defective, and the subsoil water from above may soak toward and beneath such houses, middens, cesspools, at the back must taint such basements.

The subsoil within every basement should have a layer of concrete or water.

Cesspools, cesspits, sink-holes or drains should not be formed within house basements.

The ground around dwelling-houses should be paved, flagged, asphalted, covered with concrete, or be prepared and gravelled.

Outside channels should be in good order and be regularly cleaned.

House-eaves should be guttered and spouted.

A VARIED DIET FOR FOWLS.—There are no animals more omnivorous than fowls; fish, flesh, herbs and grain being devoured by them with equal relish. We say equal, for though they commonly pounce upon meat with greater avidity than upon grain, this is generally because it affords a variety, and a flock kept for awhile almost entirely on animal food will show the same greed for a few handfuls of corn.

Now, these animals accustomed to a varied diet should not be confined to an unvarying one. There are, indeed, some species which are naturally limited to one or a few kinds of food. Thus, cattle do well enough, although kept month after month on grass alone, and a tiger will thrive with nothing but lean meat upon his bill of fare. But with other animals, and with the human race, for instance, the case is different, for no person can maintain the highest efficiency when confined to one article of food. No matter how fond we may be of a particular dish, we lose relish for it when allowed nothing else for a number of consecutive meals, and the intense craving for variety indicates as its source something more than mere appetite. It gives evidence of real necessities of the system which are constantly varying with the changing circumstances of weather, employment and other conditions.

The fondness for variety shown by fowls is as significant of real needs as we have found it to be ourselves. In purveying for a dinner, a judicious variety, selected from the three general divisions—fresh vegetables, grain and animal food—is at all seasons absolutely necessary for young and old, in order to make them perfectly thrifty. True, they will not starve on hard corn and water, neither will they pay a profit so kept.—The Poultry World.

WATCHMAKING IN SWITZERLAND. (From the Swiss Times of May 9th.)

WE have already drawn attention to the annual meeting of the Society of Arts, held on the 28th inst., under the presidency of M. Th. de Saussure, and are now able to furnish some further details.

Professor Sorot, in delivering a most interesting report, passed in review the operations of the Industrial section, in reference to Commerce, laying great stress upon the competition that has taken place in the manufacture of chronometers. This competition was instituted with the object of testing the workmanship and precision of chronometers turned out by Geneva manufacturers, and none but those adopted for pocket use were admitted. They were deposited in the hands of the authorities at the Observatory, and underwent the most searching examination. It was applied to pocket instruments of this class. The Jury specially related to decide the difficult question as to which in favor of the palm of excellence unanimously declared in favor of Messrs. J. M. Badollet & Co. This firm having carried off the sole prize by exhibiting a chronometer which fulfilled in the highest degree every condition required, crowned their first success by gaining honorable mention for two other chronometers. The allusion to this triple honor was received with the loudest applause, and Professor Humbert, President of the Fine Arts Section closed the meeting with a happy and humorous dissertation upon subjects connected with this department.

An assortment of GOLD AND SILVER WATCHES, of different patterns, from the eminent manufacturers above referred to, always kept in stock by PAGE BROTHERS, 41 King Street.
