

Poetry.

ONE IS NOT.

The fields stretch out across the sunset sky;
The cattle from the hill
Come lowing homeward with the reaper folk;
Our house is very still.

'Tis ever so; with such a hush as falls
Upon a churchyard walk,
Our hearts are haunted by an empty chair
Which checks us in our talk.

My mother listens if she chance to hear
A footstep in the lane;
Father looks out when'er the gate is stirred,
But always looks in vain!

I had a brother once; yet there's no name
On our blank household grave,
And never comes a letter with the weight
Of love, across the wave.

I think that we could bear to miss him, if
He slept beneath the sod;
But ways which wander out of sight of home
Can scarcely lead to God.

So, in the dying sunlight here I kneel,
Once more to plead for him;
And as I pray I watch the meadow path,
Until mine eyes grow dim.

My Bible opens at that son's return,
I read the tale so well;
I wonder if his father waited long?
The Scripture does not tell.

O God, that parable of human hearts
Expounds us the divine;
My brother has escaped our love, but still
He cannot find from thine!

COALS OF FIRE.

AND HOW THEY BURNED.

It were to tell you whereabouts the village of I— was situated, you might still fail to find it on the map; so we will say nothing about it, except that it was a good sized place, not quite so straggling and old-fashioned as many villages, and with a few neat little houses, as well as a street or two of cottages.

In one of these cottages there lived a laborer and his wife, and their only child, a boy of nine or ten years of age.

Tommy Ruffed was, we are sorry to say, a most troublesome fellow. His saucy face with apple cheeks, and twinkling eyes, were known— not alone in his own village, but for several miles round—as the face of the most tiresome, naughty boy in the county.

Even the dumb animals knew Tommy, and this not at all in a flattering way. Widow Brown's cow, that grazed so quietly on the green, and never looked up when other folks went by, became quite angry and active when Tommy appeared; and she frightened him on one occasion terribly, by galloping after him half way down the street.

The cocks and hens ran away as quickly as they could, as soon as they saw Tom. The ducks took to the water, the cats climbed trees, the dogs ran to their kennels and growled till he was out of sight; and even the geese stretched out their long necks and hissed as he went by. So from all this we may see that Tom was not a favorite in the village, but that, in fact, he was reckoned the greatest tease and torment in the whole place.

Now, not far from Mr. Ruffed's cottage stood a small shop kept by a barber, a good old man who commonly went by the name of "Father Snip." He was both old and good, but neither his goodness nor his age could protect him from Tom's pranks.

The barber had a neat little garden at the back of his house, and a fine apple tree that grew there had long been a great attraction to Tom. Autumn drew on apace, and the fruit with which the tree was laden began to turn red and to glisten in the red sun, whenever Tom came out of school and glanced up with longing eyes. The temptation grew stronger every day, as all temptations do when they are not resisted, and soon the boy felt that he could not rest until he had secured some of the apples.

One day, when he was quite sure that the barber was busy with a customer, he stole round to the back, climbed over the low fence into the garden, and in a moment more was under the apple-tree, and filling his pockets with the fruit. His pockets held a good many, and he was so busy stuffing them and a little bag he had brought with him, that he did not notice that he had dropped his handkerchief, a smart printed one, which his mother had bought, and marked with his full name across one corner. When Tom had picked as many as he could carry, he saw that he had nearly stripped the lower branches. "The barber will never find out who took them," said the boy to himself, as he got over the little fence and set off towards home; but Tom forgot how many secret things are brought to light through the over-ruling power of God, and how many faults are suffered to lead to their own detection.

"Tom, my boy," said Mrs. Ruffed, one morning a week or two after Tom's visit to the apple tree, "your hair is growing very long and untidy, you had better step in at the barber's on your way home from school, and have it cut." Tom of course made some objections, but his mother insisted, so there was nothing for him but to put a bold face on the matter, and do as he was told.

He had not courage however to go alone, but after school asked a small boy, a friend of his, to go with him. "I needn't be so afraid," said Tom to himself as the two boys entered the shop together; "no one saw me take the apples."

Father Snip's manner was just as usual, he was quite as pleasant and chatty as ever, and Tom breathed more freely as the old man clipped the untidy ends of hair and talked so kindly to him. "Just wait a moment," said the barber, as Tom with his neatly-cropped head was making for the door after paying.

"Wait a moment," repeated the old man, "I have something for you;" and opening a cupboard he took out a little basket and hastily left the room. After a few minutes, however, he returned, and put the basket into Tom's hands.

"I have lately come to know," said he gently, "that you are fond of apples; please take these home and enjoy them."

Tom started a moment, but he managed to say "Thank you," and then ran out of the shop and home as fast as possible.

He carried the basket up to his room, emptied the apples upon the bed, and with them out fell his handkerchief, of which he had never once thought since the day that he had taken it out. It was quite clean, and neatly folded with the marked side up, and now Tommy saw how his theft had been found out, and how gentle had been the old man's dealing with him.

A good thrashing would have hurt Tom's feelings far less than this kind action; as it was, he was quite overcome, and sitting down on the side of his bed, he fairly cried with shame and self-reproach.

"There's only one thing I can do," cried he at length, sitting up and drying his eyes. "I must go and tell him what a kind man he is, and how sorry I am."

Tom did not wait for second thoughts, but seizing his cap he ran down stairs and out at the door and in a few moments he stood on the threshold of the shop. The old man was alone, and looking up as he entered, he saw the flushed wet cheeks and eager eyes, took in the whole story of repentance and softened feelings which Tom could not express, and held out both hands to him.

During the quarter of an hour which followed, the barber talked to Tom as the boy had never been spoken to before.

We cannot repeat what passed, but it may be as well to state that Tom never forgot the lesson of the apples, but that a change began in his character and conduct, which after a while made every one love instead of dislike him.—Child's Companion.

OVERTAXING THE MINDS OF CHILDREN.

The New York Medical Journal, for March, gives some extracts from a lecture on "Physical Diseases from Mental Strain," by Dr. Richardson, of London. After treating of the ailments caused by excessive mental labor in various class of adult brain-workers, he considers the injury done to the young by overtaxing their minds in school. The extent of this injury, as he remarks, varies according to the kind and character of the work. In the very young it gives rise to direct diseases of the brain, to deposit of tubercle, if there be any predisposition to that disease, to convulsive attacks, or even to epilepsy. In less extreme cases, it causes simple weakness and exhaustion of the mind, with irregularity of power. The child may grow up with a memory overburdened with technicalities, and rendered almost incapable of the acquisition of other knowledge; and often the brain, owing to the labor upon it, becomes too soon mature, so that in manhood it is merely a large child's brain, very wonderful in a child, and equally ridiculous in a man or woman. The development in an excessive degree of one particular faculty, is also a common cause of feebleness.

As an illustration of the danger of constantly forcing a single faculty, a story is told of a boy whose originally good memory was cultivated to such a degree that he could learn fifty lines of "Paradise Lost" at a single reading. On going from school to the University he was beaten by every fellow-student in the learning of detailed and detached facts. For a long time he made mistakes that were most annoying; he was unable, for instance, to cast up accurately any column of figures, forgot dates, he ran over or under important appointments, misnamed authors in speaking of works of art or letters, and in reasoning, his want of analytical power was painfully felt. It took him full ten years to unlearn his wonderful technical art.

"For the reasons given," says Dr. Richardson, "I have always persistently opposed the special prize system in schools. A teacher, with some experience of results of teaching, I can recall no single instance in which noted prize men in early youth have away more than other men the prizes, that is to say, the successes, of after-life. Overwork in the child and in the student defeats its own object; it does not develop the powerful brain so necessary, for the man; for life is ever a new and great lesson, and some young brain must be left free for the reception of lesson on lesson. Of this there need be no doubt, and we may leave the first and leading fact. But the danger of overwork, is unfortunately not confined to the brain; it extends to the body as a whole. When the brain is overworked in the growing child, however well the child may be fed, and clothed, and cared for, there will be overtaxation of substance in proportion to the overwork. There will be stunted growth, and the formation of a bad physical body."

A PINCH OF SALT.

George went to the meadow to carry a bucket of salt for the cattle. "How odd," said George, "that nothing can live without salt! What is salt?" "Why, salt is salt, to be sure," said the ploughman. That is so. But that answer did not quite satisfy George.

There is a metal called sodium, which looks like little silvery globes, and is a sort of cousin to gold and silver. These little globes in their way over the world meet and are breathed upon by a yellowish-green vapor, called chlorine, they vanish in an instant; and in place of the two, sodium and chlorine, there is a grain of salt. It is a happy thing in nature that those do come together very often, otherwise we should have no salt, and salt is necessary for all sorts of life.

It is found almost everywhere. It is in the great oceans; there are also salt lakes, and salt springs, and salt mountains, and salt fields. Spain has a great mountain of salt; and Poland has some wonderful mines, where you are let down into a pit, and come to workshops where hundreds of men are heaving out blocks of pure white salt, which shine and sparkle in the lamp light like diamonds.

In America there is a famous salt lake. Salt springs are very common. The sea-water is pumped into broad flat pans, and left out in the sun to be dried up. When it is dried up, the salt is left in a crust on the bottom of the pans. There are also great salt works in England.

It water gives us salt, so does fire. After an eruption, the cracks and crevices of Mount Vesuvius are often covered with a thick coat of salt. Huge blocks of it were once found very near its burning mouth. The people of Iceland, too, often carry whole wagon loads of salt from their burning Mount Hecle.

There are plants likewise which can yield a small supply. By the sea-shore grows a gray, prickly, homely plant, called salt-wort. Our soda mostly comes from the ashes of this plant. Do you know the curious and pretty ice-plant? It sometimes grows in gardens; often in green houses. This is a great treasure to the people of the Canary Islands, who raise it in large fields, pull it up, burn it, and drive a good trade with the soda which they get from its ashes. What stores of useful things are to be found in nature!

Animals which live on vegetation especially delight in salt. Wild beasts on the plains, and deer, as well as cattle in our barnyards, are fond of it. Indeed, life would perish without salt.

A man weighing one hundred and fifty pounds has in him a pound of salt at least. His body needs it in order to be strong and healthy. If it is no longer to be had, his flesh falls away, he loses his hair, his eyes grow dim, his bones become soft, and his whole system breaks down.

Long ago, and even among the Arabs of the present day, bargains are made binding by the use of salt. A tray of salt is put between the two contracting parties, each takes a piece, and that means good faith for ever.

You remember the Lord Jesus tells his people to be "the salt of the earth," that is, to live so as to shed a pure and wholesome influence around where they go. Salt, we saw, is necessary to life, and the words must be "seasoned with salt."

A pinch of salt is a very common thing. We see it every day on the table, and never think of the same time it is so useful for a multitude of purposes, and how very necessary it is to the life of the system in misanthropic and angust districts. For sale at
