"But he wants to know if you will lend him a dollar !" said Mrs. Partlet.

"And couldn't you have told him No, without the preliminary ceremony of coming in here to ask me? It is likely that I shall lend a dollar or even a cent to Luke Ruddilove? Why I had a great deal better throw it in among yonder red coals ! No-of coarse, no !"

Mrs. Partlett hesitated.

"He looked so pinched and cold and wretched, Josiah. He says there's nobody in the world to let him have a cent."

" All the better for him, if he did but know it," sharply enunciated the Squire. "If it had come to that pitch half a dozen years ago, perhaps he wouldn't have been the miserable man he is now." "We used to go to school together," said Mrs.

Partlett, gently. "He was the smartest boy in the class."

"That's probable enough," said the Squire. " But it don't alter the fact that he's a poor drunken wretch now. Send him about his business, Polly, and if his time is of any consequence, just let him know that he'd better not waste it coming here after dollars.'

And the Squire leaned back in his chair after a positive fashion, as if the whole matter was definitely decided.

Mrs. Partlett went back to the kitchen where Luke Ruddilove was spreading his poor thin fingers over the blaze of fire, his tattered garments steaming as if he were a pillar of vapor.

"He won't let you have it, Luke," said she, "I thought he wouldn't.

"Then I've got to starve, like any other dog !" said Luke Ruddilove, turning away moodily. "And, after all, I don't suppose it makes much difference whether I shuffle out of the world today or to-morrow."

"Oh, Luke ! not to your wife ?" "She'd be better off without me," said Luke, down-heartedly.
