

I PRAY FOR THEE. When thou art very weak and weary, dear, When it is dark, and all seems dreary here,

And suddenly a light, almost divine, Upon thy doubting eyes and heart doth shine, And thou the way to go dost plainly see, Know, dearest heart, that then I pray for thee.

Poetry.

Far off in little chamber I am saying These words, all softly, and God hears our praying

Dear Lord, I do not know If all is well, With him whom I love so, But thou canst tell: O, give him light to see! O, with him ever be! 'Till all is well.

When with a weight of sorrow and of fears. Crushed to the earth, thou weepest bitter tears, So ! gently round thee arms of tenderest love Raise thee from depths of woe, and far above Thou hear'st a sweet voice say, "Trust in me !" Know, dearest heart, that then I pray for thee.

Then with full heart of love to God I'm saying

O Lord ! perhaps, to-day, Down in the dust, He think'st not, Thou did'st say, " Heart, in me trust," O, save him, Lord, in love ! O, hft him up above, Out of the dust.

When tenderly beside some stricken child, Thou standest, and dost speak of Jesus mild, Dost whisper of His patience and His death It seems to thee as if some quickening breath, Know, dearest heart, that then I pray for thee.

Be with him, Lord, to-day, And him inspire, As lovingly a day, A path far higher, He shows to blinded heart, To his thought beneath impart, His words inspire.

Nor think that I, in arrogance would claim The credit of these gifts : in Jesus' name, I'm praying for thee always, and my prayer Is answered, that I too may have my share In thy great nobleness, and thus may be Doing some work, because I pray for thee.

Thus always in my loneliness I'm saying Such words, all softly, and God hears me praying Dear Lord, both he and I

Are far from strong ! To each of us be nigh, The way is long : Perhaps he needs not me,

Jesus	we	both	need thee,
Make	us	more	strong.

From the Watchman and Reflector. THE DYING ATHEIST.

Upon his couch a ghastly form he lay, With seeming calm, and quiet but of art; Disease had marked his body for its prey, Nor life divine brought pleasure to his heart. But like a beast, earth-bounded his desires, Perverted knowledge swayed his darkened mind ; Nor grace nor goodness his cold heart inspires; To faith, to hope, and to religion blind. His sunken eye, his wan and withered cheek, The sure precursers of approaching end,-To him in vain a humbling language speak, Or point to Jesus as his guide and friend. Thus fainter failed the waning lamp of life ; A moment still, and then the spark was fled. Grim smiled the features, with sad tokens rife Of powers within which sleep not with the dead. Ah, hapless soul ! is this the envied lot, The meet reward of spirit and of mind ? To live, to die, to perish and to rot, Mere forms of matter to the earth corfined ? Is this the boon philosophy hath stored ? Must this the sum of all existence be? O Heaven, avert ! Forbid it, gracious Lord,
