Who sitteth down with folded hands To dream the hours away! Know ye not 'tis divine command To labor while 'tis day ? Arouse, ye careless ones, and list !

The Master bids thee go; Who heedeth not His great behest Will reap in tears; for, lo Lift up thine eyes, behold, how white The fields already are! The harvest truly doth invite The labourers, but where Shall they be found ? so many pause And weak excuses frame; Are they not bound t'obey His laws Who bear the Saviour's name?

'Tis true ye cannot all endure The heat and task alike, But they shall find His mercies sure Who work with all their might; Who cannot great and grand deeds do Can noble ones perform,

Can help some broken heart find true Sweet comforts from life's storms; Can point some weary aching one The way of peace and rest; If only one such act be done The doer shall be blest. Then is it not worth striving for, With all the powers we own, To gain at least one brilliant star

To sparkle in our crown? How radiant and how beautiful The crown the faithful wear-Grant, Lord, more earnest we may be? And in their glories share.
