The Future's "coming man." His eyes, perchance, we read the stars, And search their unknown ways; Perchance the human heart and soul Will open at their gaze;

Perchance their keen and flashing glance Will be a nation's light-Those eyes that now are wistful beat On some "big fellow's" kite."

The brow, where mighty thoughts do dwell In solemn, secret state: Where fierce Ambition's restless strength Shall war with future fate ; Where Science from now hidden caves

New treasures shall outpour-Tis knit now, with a troubled doubt, Are two or three cents more? Those lips that, in the coming years, Will plead, or pray, or teach;

Whose whispered words, on lightning flash, From world to world may reach: That sternly grave, may speak command, Or, smiling, win control, Are coaxing now for ginger-bread With all a baby's soul!

Those hands-those busy little hands-So sticky, small and brown; Those hands whose only mission seems To tear all order down-Who knows what hidden strength may lie Within thy future grasp,

Though now 'tis but a taffy-stick In sturdy hold they clasp! Ah, blessings on those little hands, Whose work is yet undone! And blessings on those little feet, Whose race is yet unrun;

And blessings on the little brain That has not learned to plan; What e'er the Future holds in store, God bless the "coming man!"

"LIFE'S TROUBLED SEA."

BY C. P. FIELD, On an ocean we are sailing

O'er a dark and troubled sea, Where the storm is fiercely raging, Far away from home are we. Now upon the mountain summit Of some mighty wave we ride,

Then we're plunged into the chasm That is yawning at its side. And the sun that's ever shining Is obscured by clouds from view, While the wind our barque is driving O'er the fearful breakers, too.

Oh! how many will have perished Ere life's voyage shall be o'er, And how few are safely landed Where the breakers cease to rear. If we only would be wiser, And believe God's holy word; Put our trust in Christ the Saviour, Take as captain him on board; Then would each and every sailor, Sailing o'er life's rugged main, Reach at length that peaceful harbor-Where the saints forever reign.

he were old acquaintances. The next morning, when Joe passed for school, Jack stood in the door, looking as sooty as his shop. He was a hugh fellow, sinewy and powerful, and looked as though he might have been made at his own forge; and yet in this steely ease throbbed a heart soft and warm, and exceedingly tender. Rosebud, in passing that way once or twice, had looked in his shop with seeming interest, because it was work, and Jack had fancied that he caught the same look in her face that had belonged to a little daughter of his, who had rested now seven years under Cape Island, N. S. John A. Cunningham.

"Joe," said Jack, "John Town told me last night that you was goin' to lick the teacher." Joe straightened up and looked important. "Wall, yis, Jack, I do think of commencing operations, a little, in that line. She's the delicatest little thing, and it won't do to be very savage, and it won't do to have her Possin' of a feller 'round, nuther, you know." "See here, Joe," said Jack, "I don't believe you ever had a fust class whippin' in your life, and I'll tell you what I'll do. You tech a hair of that little gal's head, and I'll give you a sound maulin', as sure's my name's Jack Jones"—and Jack brought down his sledge-hammer of a fist with emphasis on to his leathern apron.

Joe put his thumb up to his nose, and marched on. He did not care much for Jack's threat; he felt so sure he could keep out of his way, and he did mean to give the young school-mistress a scare, and this was the way he would do it : he would break rules again, and she would call him out, but he wouldn't go. He felt pretty sure she was gritty enough to undertake to whip him; then he would catch the stick, break it, throw it over her head, assume so offensive an attitude, in short, that she would be glad to retire to her desk, and leave him master of the field. This was to be the programme It was all to be done without bloodshed, and let Jack Jones catch him if he could.

So a little while after school had taken up that morning he commenced throwing spitballs; but Resebud, who was attending to a class, seemed eutirely oblivious. When she had finished, she walked up the aisle to do sums. She was at work at the back of his seat when pop went a ball, and hit Tiny Smith on the chin.

At the instant, from some mysterious fold of Rosebud's dress flew a long, tough, willowy bluebeech, and gave several quick slashes around the shoulders of Joe's linen coat before he seemed to comprehend the position. Then he sprang up and caught at the stick. But the blows came thicker and faster, first at one point, then at another, until the whole stick was worn up, and he had not suc ceeded in catching it once. Joe was defeated but not conquered, and he would got the better of her yet, as sure as fate, he told the boys at recess. So all day long while his wounds smarted, he pondered some new method of assault; and no doubt Rose bud would have been equal to the occasion, had nothing supervened. But as Joe went home that night with head bent, still studying at his problem, he was caught by Jack, who held him as if in one of his iron vises. He carried him into his shop, and laid him across his anvil block.

"Hand me the hammer," said Jack to his man who was at work at the bellows, that puffed and 475.—SWEEP snorted, and threw the angry sparks up, snapping and crackling. Jack turned the boy over on the block, held both his hands in one of his, placed his knee upon him, and raised his free arm.

"Hold-hold on, Jack," blubbered Joe. "Ididn't do it. I never teched'er. But she gin me a awful wallupin'." Jack hesitated. "I've hearn long enough that Joe Thornton was the wust boy here, at the present time, and not be lowed to walk ing any good whatsomever."

Jack looked like a grimy angel of retribution firmly devoted to his work.
