Poetry.

I AM WAITING BY REV. J. CLARKE. I am waiting, calmly waiting, For the house-call every day ; Where I cannot see my Saviour I can have no wish to stay. Like an infant weeping, sobbing, For the warm maternal breast, This poor heart is panting, throbbing, For the joy of endless rest.

I am waiting in the morning, When the dew is on the flowers ; I am waiting in the day-time, And through night's slow passing hours. I am waiting for the Master Who, ere long will take me home, And my heart is beating faster With the thought that he will come.

I am waiting in the spring-tide, And through long, bright summer days ; All through autumn, glory-laden, Oft I ask why He delays. And when wintry winds are blowing, I am waiting, waiting still ; And my hope is steadfast, knowing He will come-at length He will.

I am waiting, calmly waiting, For the home-call every day ; Where I cannot see my Saviour I can have no wish to stay. Lo ! He cometh, cometh surely : Toil and pain will soon be past ; On His Word I rest securely ; I shall see His face at last.

JESUS ONLY.

Thou one staid Rock in life's tempestuous sea, To Thee I come ! Henceforth-all else unstable-but in Thee I find my home. Rest of my soul, once weary, peaceful now, The central object of my spirit's joy art Thou. Though all should cast me out, yet still in Thee I'll put my trust ; Mine is a treasure time and tide defy, And moth and rust. Give me, O Lord, the sympathetic heart

That lives upon Thy love, and cannot live apart. O Jesus ! fix Thine image on my soul, That there I may Gaze on Thy beauty till I am made whole ; And every ray

From the world's sinking suns that own not Thee, Dies down in Thine own light and its obscurity.

HOW THEODORE HELPED.

this boy ?" Theodore Denny had lived with kind parents for ten years in a happy home. But one day there came a change to the pleasant home on the hill. Theodore's father, who had been ill for some time, grew worse. He was not strong enough to drive out, even on the warm days, and more ; soon the children were not called to his bedside for their morning kiss, and then very soon they were told that their dear father had gone to heaven. The younger children only knew that the house was strangely quiet, and their father's face was so cold and stiff, it would not smile even one little bit. and then, ever so many people came to the house, and a man read out of a book, and then that great long box was carried away. It all seemed very mysterious. Theodore could only comprehend two things ; one was he did not see his father any more. and the other that his mother looked like another person. She was pale and thin and sad, and wore such dreadful black clothes. It must be because his father was staying away so long, for when he asked her if his father would be gone a good while, she said, "Yes." Then he looked so frightened and greater things." asked her if she never expected to see him again. "Oh, yes, yes, my child, I shall go to him." And was she going away too, cried Theodore, to leave them all alone ? Then his mother kissed him and Jimmy, gray-shirted and bare-footed, guided them said, "Not until God sent for her, but that her into the yard.
