

The Religious Intelligencer.

AN EVANGELICAL FAMILY NEWSPAPER FOR NEW BRUNSWICK AND NOVA SCOTIA.

REV. J. MCLEOD.]

VOL. XXVI.—No. 1.

"THAT GOD IN ALL THINGS MAY BE GLORIFIED THROUGH JESUS CHRIST."—Peter.

[EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

NEW FALL AND WINTER STOCK OF DRY GOODS
—
LOGAN'S.

EVERY DEPARTMENT COMPLETE AT LOWEST PRICES.

BLANKETS, FLANNELS, SWANSOWNS, COTTONS AND SHEETINGS, TICKING AND TABLE LINEN,

New Mantles,

—AND—

MANTLE CLOTHS,
Dress Goods

in New Colors and Materials;

Wool Shawls,

From $1.00 to $8.00.

FURS! FURS! FURS!

Seal, Mink, Ermine Musk,

MUFFS AND CAPS,

PUR TRIMMING,

From $\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{3}{4}$ inches wide.

GLOVES and HOSIERY.

Wool Goods,

SCOTCH FINGERING AND BERLIN WOOLS.

Peacock and Turkish Yarn.

CARPETINGS OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

PARK'S COTTON WARPS in any color.

THOMAS LOGAN.

Montreal, Dec. 20, 1878.

Fall and Winter IMPORTATIONS.

No stock in arriving, a very extensive assortment for the various departments. Our customers may rely upon getting

EXTRA GOOD VALUE

THIS SEASON, THE Cheapest YET OFFERED.

NEW MILLINERY.

HATS, FLOWERS, FEATHERS, VELVETS, SILKS, SATINS, LACES, WINGS, ORNAMENTS, &c.

Dress Goods

IN GREAT VARIETY.

Caducers, French Merinos, Rapp Cords, Laine Suitings, &c.

Ulster Cloths

AND ULSTERS.

An immense Stock of Presidents, Meltons, Mattocks, Moscow, Pilots, Oxfords, and other Cloths.

CANADIAN AND ENGLISH

FLANNELS

AND *

Heavy Woollens of every description.

Tale Linens, Towellings, Hessians, Damasks, &c.

PAISLEY and WOOL SHAWLS

WOOL SKIRTS, &c.

A lot of Ladies' Ulsters very cheap. Dress and Made Trimmings, Fringes.

INSPECTION SOLICITED AT WILMOT'S BUILDING, QUEEN STREET;

P. McPEAKE.

Extra superfine Black Broad Cloths, Pilots, Bearers and Elyrians, Fancy Coatings, Cashmere and Silk Vests, Blouses, West of England and Scotch Tweeds.

The Custom Tailoring and Clothing is still continued at the old stand, in Edgewood's Building. A full Stock of Gentle Furnishing Goods always on hand.

P. McPEAKE.

FRIDAY, Oct. 25.

SAINT JOHN, N. B., FRIDAY, JANUARY 3, 1879.

WHOLE NO. 1301.

THE OLD YEAR.

By MARIANNE FARNIGHAM.
We start together along the way,
We sing together the old sweet songs,
And, waiting here for the new year's day,
Our comforts stand, as in smiling throngs.
Shall we keep the things that we love so well?
As the days pass on, and the year is old!
Or will change discover us where we dwell,
And grief draw near as the hours unfold?
We start with vigor, and joyous health,
With firm, strong steps, for the hidden way;
We have within us a mine of wealth;
But all the strength that we trust in stay!
Shall we be untouched by disease and pain?
Shall health come near and yet pass us by?
Shall we travel joyously on again,
Again let us down in the path to die?

"Papa," said Bertha Shulburne, a few hours later, "what makes you look so sad?" Are you about taking his departure? Or are you repenting that you refused giving me that necklace—oh, Papa! You see I have overcome in the battle I fought this morning with vanity and selfishness, and having received mamma's forgiveness, though I grieved her sorely. God would not let go over my extravagant wishes. Say, papa, what is the matter? You have been spoken or sniled since you came in?"

"I have seen and heard something, Bertha, that has made me sad. I have seen two Berthas to-night. But how great the contrast! One is surrounded by all that makes life pleasant, with kind friends to love and cherish; while the other knows nothing but poverty, squalor and misery. You need to see poor little Bertha Cameron, and hear her story, to understand how half the world lives."

"Oh, I am going to see them to-morrow. Mama spoke of it this morning; she is going to visit them, and minister to their wants, and find the work we have but begun! And will evening come from the misty sea? Telling us sadly our work is done?"

"What are the answers? Oh, One is wise to know the changes of all the years; We lift our eyes to the far-off skies, And say to Him, through the rising tears, "We will not ask Thee to show us now The grief or pleasure, the work or rest, Only be with us in mercy, Thou Who gives us always whatever is best."

Take the glass of memory and look on the soul of 1878; what have you written there? Deeds of charity, deeds of love, deeds of self-sacrifice? Yes, they are there, carved in. There is that patient endurance of suffering, that firm standing for the right, that meeting and conquering of temptation, that great and almost deadly struggle with your tempting sin. Had you forgotten those? But, they are not lost.

The old year has kept a record of them, and is taking them out into eternity. To bury them? No; but to set them along your pathway to become immortal pillars to commemo rate your life-work and struggles.

The right one, he filled it out in a jiffy and handed it to Jones to sign.

Jones read the paper his knees knocked together. It was a mortgage on his house and lot; a good security that he would return the umbrellas in good order within fifteen minutes. He failed.

"Why, why, Squire I only want to borrow your umbrella to run across the street with. I'll fetch it back in two seconds."

The Squire shoved his spectacles up over his head spot until they formed two skyights in his intellectual roof, and looking Jones full in the face, said:

"You only want to run across the street. You'll return it in two seconds. Young man, what's that they all say. I take no stock in them."

Man wants to hide below, but when he wants his umbrella he wants it. I have known people in my time who have listened to the song of the siren who came to borrow umbrellas, until she had transformed them into a people without an umbrella between them and the pelting storms. I am not one of that kind. I have lived a long time. I have accumulated a fortune. Why? For the simple reason that I have not spent my substance in buying umbrellas. That umbrella which you hold in your hand is certain not of uncommon beauty, nor is it of great value. It is dying, ere Death sends him away. Ah, you call, but his ear is dead already! Rouse him from the stupor creeping over him! Tell him not to carry back to you; its skeleton fingers will pick the lock of memory's bolted door; suddenly it is gone. You cannot afford to have all of that evil go before you into eternity. Many years of faithful living would not counteract the evil of this one year of life; and it must not be that your eternity is to be so marred, so darkened. But what can you do? You cannot unsay, you cannot undo. You have been working for the salvation of the Camerons; and all those are now going to God—now."

So see them out in the old year's memory. Blot them out; recall those words; improve those neglected opportunities. Hasten! the old year is dying, ere Death sends him away. Ah, you call, but his ear is dead already! Rouse him from the stupor creeping over him! Tell him not to carry back to you; its skeleton fingers will pick the lock of memory's bolted door; suddenly it is gone. You cannot afford to have all of that evil go before you into eternity. Many years of faithful living would not counteract the evil of this one year of life; and it must not be that your eternity is to be so marred, so darkened. But what can you do? You cannot unsay, you cannot undo. You have been working for the salvation of the Camerons; and all those are now going to God—now."

So see them out in the old year's memory. Blot them out; recall those words; improve those neglected opportunities. Hasten! the old year is dying, ere Death sends him away. Ah, you call, but his ear is dead already! Rouse him from the stupor creeping over him! Tell him not to carry back to you; its skeleton fingers will pick the lock of memory's bolted door; suddenly it is gone. You cannot afford to have all of that evil go before you into eternity. Many years of faithful living would not counteract the evil of this one year of life; and it must not be that your eternity is to be so marred, so darkened. But what can you do? You cannot unsay, you cannot undo. You have been working for the salvation of the Camerons; and all those are now going to God—now."

"I used to know Cameron well. He was a student at the same college with myself, and even then I noticed with pain his fondness for strong drink. He was a good student, and fine scholar, and possessed a something that won him friends everywhere. The Faculty bore with him for some time, but finally for the credit of the college were obliged to expel him—as he was entering upon his last year, too. He left the city soon after and I read his marriage with the daughter of a judge some time after. How contrived such a marriage I never knew. I have known of the terms when he became known, her mother, a wise and prudent woman, feared that to induce Bertha in this particular, though her father was abundantly able to do so, would only pave the way for greater extravagances, and she was endeavoring to bring her up only child in the way it should go, teaching her that it was not all of life to live, nor all of death to die; but that she must have higher and nobler aims in than decking her person with fine clothes and jewels, and pampering the appetite, while the soul within remained naked, poor, and hungry."

It was within a few days of the New Year when the present was to be made, and Mrs. Shulburne felt that for the sake of right she must explain the cause of their withholding it from her. Bertha loved her parents very early, but when she discovered all her bright eyes thus cruelly blasted, she lost her usual self-control, and said many bitter things, for which she was heartily sorry afterwards.

"I don't care anything about the Camerons," he said, in reply her mother's mention of a poor family. "Because, Cameron, and those like him, are drunkards, and have brought their families to ruin and disgrace, sacrifice our pleasure, appropriate luxuries, sacrifice our pleasure, the wealthy wife has amassed by dint of steady toil, to lavish it upon those poor, idle wretches? I doubt not Mrs. Cameron, herself, can quaff the flowing bowl with as much zest as her debauched husband."

"For shame, Bertha, you wrong poor Mrs. Cameron most cruelly. To-morrow wrong I propose calling there, and shall insist upon you accompanying me. If, after the call, you still wish the necklace, it shall be yours."

"You will please excuse me, mamma. I do not care to mingle in such vulgar society, and allow me to say that since I cannot have what I desire, I shall release you and pray from your promise respecting my reward, as I do not wish a New Year's present."

Her mother looked astonished and grieved; but simply said in reply, "Very well, Bertha; but meanwhile I must request you to remain in your own room until you become my own beloved Bertha, and can exhibit proper respect for your parents; till then you may not expect me to see you."

"I used to care nothing about the Camerons," he said, in reply her mother's mention of a poor family. "Because, Cameron, and those like him, are drunkards, and have brought their families to ruin and disgrace, sacrifice our pleasure, appropriate luxuries, sacrifice our pleasure, the wealthy wife has amassed by dint of steady toil, to lavish it upon those poor, idle wretches? I doubt not Mrs. Cameron, herself, can quaff the flowing bowl with as much zest as her debauched husband."

"It was within a few days of the New Year when the present was to be made, and Mrs. Shulburne felt that for the sake of right she must explain the cause of their withholding it from her. Bertha loved her parents very early, but when she discovered all her bright eyes thus cruelly blasted, she lost her usual self-control, and said many bitter things, for which she was heartily sorry afterwards."

"I used to care nothing about the Camerons," he said, in reply her mother's mention of a poor family. "Because, Cameron, and those like him, are drunkards, and have brought their families to ruin and disgrace, sacrifice our pleasure, appropriate luxuries, sacrifice our pleasure, the wealthy wife has amassed by dint of steady toil, to lavish it upon those poor, idle wretches? I doubt not Mrs. Cameron, herself, can quaff the flowing bowl with as much zest as her debauched husband."

"For shame, Bertha, you wrong poor Mrs. Cameron most cruelly. To-morrow wrong I propose calling there, and shall insist upon you accompanying me. If, after the call, you still wish the necklace, it shall be yours."

"You will please excuse me, mamma. I do not care to mingle in such vulgar society, and allow me to say that since I cannot have what I desire, I shall release you and pray from your promise respecting my reward, as I do not wish a New Year's present."

Her mother looked astonished and grieved; but simply said in reply, "Very well, Bertha; but meanwhile I must request you to remain in your own room until you become my own beloved Bertha, and can exhibit proper respect for your parents; till then you may not expect me to see you."

"I used to care nothing about the Camerons," he said, in reply her mother's mention of a poor family. "Because, Cameron, and those like him, are drunkards, and have brought their families to ruin and disgrace, sacrifice our pleasure, appropriate luxuries, sacrifice our pleasure, the wealthy wife has amassed by dint of steady toil, to lavish it upon those poor, idle wretches? I doubt not Mrs. Cameron, herself, can quaff the flowing bowl with as much zest as her debauched husband."

"It was within a few days of the New Year when the present was to be made, and Mrs. Shulburne felt that for the sake of right she must explain the cause of their withholding it from her. Bertha loved her parents very early, but when she discovered all her bright eyes thus cruelly blasted, she lost her usual self-control, and said many bitter things, for which she was heartily sorry afterwards."

"I used to care nothing about the Camerons," he said, in reply her mother's mention of a poor family. "Because, Cameron, and those like him, are drunkards, and have brought their families to ruin and disgrace, sacrifice our pleasure, appropriate luxuries, sacrifice our pleasure, the wealthy wife has amassed by dint of steady toil, to lavish it upon those poor, idle wretches? I doubt not Mrs. Cameron, herself, can quaff the flowing bowl with as much zest as her debauched husband."

"For shame, Bertha, you wrong poor Mrs. Cameron most cruelly. To-morrow wrong I propose calling there, and shall insist upon you accompanying me. If, after the call, you still wish the necklace, it shall be yours."

"You will please excuse me, mamma. I do not care to mingle in such vulgar society, and allow me to say that since I cannot have what I desire, I shall release you and pray from your promise respecting my reward, as I do not wish a New Year's present."

Her mother looked astonished and grieved; but simply said in reply, "Very well, Bertha; but meanwhile I must request you to remain in your own room until you become my own beloved Bertha, and can exhibit proper respect for your parents; till then you may not expect me to see you."

"I used to care nothing about the Camerons," he said, in reply her mother's mention of a poor family. "Because, Cameron, and those like him, are drunkards, and have brought their families to ruin and disgrace, sacrifice our pleasure, appropriate luxuries, sacrifice our pleasure, the wealthy wife has amassed by dint of steady toil, to lavish it upon those poor, idle wretches? I doubt not Mrs. Cameron, herself, can quaff the flowing bowl with as much zest as her debauched husband."

"It was within a few days of the New Year when the present was to be made, and Mrs. Shulburne felt that for the sake of right she must explain the cause of their withholding it from her. Bertha loved her parents very early, but when she discovered all her bright eyes thus cruelly blasted, she lost her usual self-control, and said many bitter things, for which she was heartily sorry afterwards."

"I used to care nothing about the Camerons," he said, in reply her mother's mention of a poor family. "Because, Cameron, and those like him, are drunkards, and have brought their families to ruin and disgrace, sacrifice our pleasure, appropriate luxuries, sacrifice our pleasure, the wealthy wife has amassed by dint of steady toil, to lavish it upon those poor, idle wretches? I doubt not Mrs. Cameron, herself, can quaff the flowing bowl with as much zest as her debauched husband."

"For shame, Bertha, you wrong poor Mrs. Cameron most cruelly. To-morrow wrong I propose calling there, and shall insist upon you accompanying me. If, after the call, you still wish the necklace, it shall be yours."

"You will please excuse me, mamma. I do not care to mingle in such vulgar society, and allow me to say that since I cannot have what I desire, I shall release you and pray from your promise respecting my reward, as I do not wish a New Year's present."

Her mother looked astonished and grieved; but simply said in reply, "Very well, Bertha; but meanwhile I must request you to remain in your own room until you become my own beloved Bertha, and can exhibit proper respect for your parents; till then you may not expect me to see you."

"I used to care nothing about the Camerons," he said, in reply her mother's mention of a poor family. "Because, Cameron, and those like him, are drunkards, and have brought their families to ruin and disgrace, sacrifice our pleasure, appropriate luxuries, sacrifice our pleasure, the wealthy wife has amassed by dint of steady toil, to lavish it upon those poor, idle wretches? I doubt not Mrs. Cameron, herself, can quaff the flowing bowl with as much zest as her debauched husband."

"It was within a few days of the New Year when the present was to be made, and Mrs. Shulburne felt that for the sake of right she must explain the cause of their withholding it from her. Bertha loved her parents very early, but when she discovered all her bright eyes thus cruelly blasted, she lost her usual self-control, and said many bitter things, for which she was heartily sorry afterwards."

"I used to care nothing about the Camerons," he said, in reply her mother's mention of a poor family. "Because, Cameron, and those like him, are drunkards, and have brought their families to ruin and disgrace, sacrifice our pleasure, appropriate luxuries, sacrifice our pleasure, the wealthy wife has amassed by dint of steady toil, to lavish it upon those poor, idle wretches? I doubt not Mrs. Cameron, herself, can quaff the flowing bowl with as much zest as her debauched husband."

"For shame, Bertha, you wrong poor Mrs. Cameron most cruelly. To-morrow wrong I propose calling there, and shall insist upon you accompanying me. If