NO GARNERED SHEAVES.

BY MRS. VICTORIA A. SMITH.

Almost ripe was the harvest,
With its wealth of waving grain;
And I looked for the reapers busy,
Scattered up and down the plain.
O, I watched till the fields were whitened,
But no one came to glean;
And I saw how the reapers, listless,
Just leaned on their sickles keen.

And I called: "O, reapers, hasten,
There's a chill breath over the plain;
Ye must gather the harvest quickly,
And bind up the ripened grain!"
But the reapers made answer: "We're ready
To join in the harvest home;
And we wait with our sickles, sharpened,
Till the Master-reaper come."

O, where was the Master-reaper,
That he tarried when fields grew ripe?
And why were the reapers all listless
When their sickles were glancing so bright?
From places made fragrant with blossoms,
All over the fruit-strewn lands,
They were bringing the choicest of treasures
For the Master-reaper's hands.

Then I cried: "O, Master-reaper,
They are standing all idle here,
Tho' the fields are ready for reaping,
And the shadows of night are near!
O, truly great is the harvest,
There's enough for each one to do;
The sickles are sharpened for labor,
And the reapers are waiting for you!"

But he only called to them gayly;
"Go, reapers, all over the plain,
And sing the glad song of the harvest
As ye gather the rich, ripe grain!"
But never a sweep of a sickle
Broke the stillness that grew forlorn—
O, I knew there would be no reaping
When he came not to beckon them on!

And now, when the Lord of the harvest
Is calling all over his lands,
When the laborers, eager and joyous,
Are hastening with well-filled hands;
I know as they pass before him,
How he looks on his own, and grieves
For the wasted fields—for the many
Who are bringing no garnered sheaves.

NEARING THE SHORE.

An old man sits in a worn arm-chair,
White as snow is his thin soft hair,
Furrowed his cheek by time and care,
And back and forth it sways;
There's a far away look in his dim, dim eye,
Which tells of thoughts of the long gone-by,
For he sits once more neath a cloudless sky,
And in childhood merrily plays.

He rests his cheek on the head of his cane,
And happily smiling, dreams over again
Of that home, the brook, the meadow, the lane—
Dreams all with a vision clear;
Then childhood yields into manhood's place,
And he looks once more in his clear bright face,
And down in the starry eyes he can trace
A love remembered and dear.

Then he wakes and sighs:—"It seems but a dream
That comes to me now like a golden gleam
Or the shimmering of the sun's lost beam;
But 'tis pleasant to think it o'er—
That youth was so sweet, but now is past;
Those days of love were too precious to last
But over yonder their pleasures are cast,
And I am nearing that shore."
He is gliding on in his little boat;
O'er the calm still water they peacefully float;
But echo full oft brings a well-known note
From the land he has left behind;
But time will row back for him no more,
And he gazes away to that other shore,
And knows, when the voyage of life shall be o'er
That his dream beyond he will find.

The seeds of youth which in youth we sow,
Adown through the aisles of the future will grow,
And shed on age a beautiful glow,
As they come in memory's gleams.
Loved faces will come to dimming sight,
Sweet words will echo in day-dreams bright,
And circle old age with their halos of light
As they mingle in beautiful dreams.

The Fireside.

HOW JOHN MOSS HELPED HIS MOTHER.

The funeral was over, and the house was put to rights. John and his mother had gone through the form of supper; the table was cleared, and the lamp was lighted and set on it, in the usual order. And now that there was nothing to be done but to sit and think, the grief came back afresh, and they wept together. John was nearly seventeen. He was, henceforth, mother's protector. He felt as if he had made a sudden stride into manhood.

"There, mother! Don't cry any more! Poor, dear little mother!" said he, drawing his chair beside hers, and putting his arm around her shoulders. "I'm going to take care of you now. I've something to tell you."

Mrs. Moss dried her teas, and seemed comforted by her son's tenderness.

"Mr. Blake told me to-night I could have the situation of janitor of the new school-house. That will be six dollars a month. But Mr. Wilson will pay me fourteen to work for him. I think I had better leave school and work for Mr. Wilson, mother. I must earn the living now. I mean to fill my father's place as well as I can."

But the widow's heart was set on seeing her son a teacher, in the position his father had long held; and though his plans cheered her, she would not permit him to leave school. She was skilful with the needle, and that must bring money for their needs. Six dollars a month would help, and they could get along. John was easily persuaded to fall in with his mother's plan.

"But I shall bring you all my wages, mother. I want to be a help, not a burden, to you."

Kind-hearted John Moss! He truly meant it. He fully intended to devote himself to make his mother happy and comfortable. Inexperienced, thoughtless John Moss! He did not know himself. He did not dream that he could be selfish enough to forget his mother's need for his own pleasure. He brought her his first wages, and they went to buy materials for a new suit for him, which she worked far into the night to make up. The second he wanted a gun. He had been promised one by his father, and now he knew a chance to buy one for "only six dollars." He wearied his mother with arguments till she consented. Her face had grown paler, already from constant confinement at her needle. And six dollars was all she earned by a whole week of steady, hard work. But John did not think of that. She rose early every Monday morning to do the washing for herself and John. She was a delicate little woman, and washing was hard work for her. Biddy M'Guire would do it many weeks for six dollars, as she had always done when John's father was alive. But John did not think of that.

"Perhaps I can shoot a squirrel for our dinner, now and then," said he.

She did say then: "Six dollars would buy meat for a good many dinners, John."

But he bought the gun, and she smiled patiently at his enthusiasm over it, as mothers will, and sewed a little every night that month.

The next month John had lost his pocket knife, and must have another, and ammunition and a new school-book left but a trifle for his mother. That month she sewed a stitch in her side. The next month was December, and wood must be bought, and other expenses pressed hard, and John's wages were needed, and she took them reluctantly, feeling that he had yielded them but half willingly. When the wood-pile was in the yard, however, the sight of it, and the knowledge he had paid for it, made him feel quite self-complacent. "I am going to saw it all up, as soon as I can get it housed, so it will be out of the way of the snow storms," said he; "I do help you some, don't I, mother? What a big pile it is! I did want those skates at Brigham's, though!"

His mother smiled and sighed, pressed her hand on the aching spot in her side, and then made her needle fly fast as ever.

"Don't you think I can have the skates next month? This wood will last a good while. Will there be anything else to buy?" His mother thought of the shoes she needed even now and of the nearly empty flour barrel, of approaching taxes, and of the many, many stitches that must be set to meet these demands, and others that were continually arising, and replied: "I don't know. I fear we shall need all we can earn through the winter. Boots are of more consequence than skates, and yours will soon be worn out."

"O, these'll last ever so long!" said John, giving the chair a thump with his best boot, that made his mother start painfully. She had grown weak and nervous lately. "I guess I won't begin to saw the wood to-night. There's enough for to-morrow in the shed now, and I'm tired."

To-morrow came, cold, snowy, and blustering. John was obliged to be off early at the school-house, but promised to come straight home after school, and attack the wood-pile. How could he forget!

At four o'clock the last stick of the wood was burned, and the sitting room began to grow chilly. Mrs. Moss went out and scraped up chips to keep the fire till John should come. Five o'clock, and still he came not.

"I shall have to saw off a stick or two, to last till he comes," she said, and went out to the shed. The wind buffeted her. The snow flew in her face, and crept into the holes in her shoes; but she persevered, and dragged one of the heavy sticks into the shed. Slowly and laboriously she pushed the saw up and down, till one stick was off. Then she stopped to breathe and pressed her hand on her side. But one stick would not keep the fire, so she went to work again. Up and down weakly and wearily now, till, suddenly, the dreadful stitch in her side, that hurt her, seemed to break, and she fell down, the blood flowing from her mouth.

John found her there a little later, chilled, fainting, half-dead. The doctor did all he could; the neighbors watched, and nursed, and helped; John was all assiduity, all tenderness and self sacrifice now; but there was no help for the poor little mother. She died, blessing him calling him her dear, kind boy, and praying for his welfare.

John has had twenty-seven years, since, in which to remember, with regret and self-reproach, how little he helped his mother.—Congregationalist.

RULES FOR HEALTH.

We should not leave our souls to the ministers nor our health to the doctors. So the following simple rules for the preservation of health, especially through the changeable seasons of autumn, winter, and spring, should not be left entirely to health journals. We are right in the midst of the time when they apply:—

Never lean with your back against anything that is cold.

Never begin to journey until breakfast is eaten.

Never take warm drinks and then immediately go out into the cold air.

Keep the back—especially between the shoulder blades—well covered; also the chest well protected.

In sleeping in a cold room establish a habit of breathing through the nose, and never with the mouth wide open.

Never go to bed with cold or damp feet; always toast them by the fire ten or fifteen minuets before going to bed.

Never omit regular bathing; for unless the skin is in an active condition the cold will close the pores and favor congestion and other diseases.

After exercise of any kind never ride in an open carriage nor near the window of a car for a moment. It is dangerous to health and even to life.

When hoarse speak as little as possible until the hoarseness is recovered from, else the voice may be permanently lost, or difficulties of the throat produced.

Merely warm the back by a fire, and never continue keeping the back exposed to the heat after it has become comfortably warm. To do so is debilitating.

When going from a warm atmosphere into acolder one, keep the mouth closed, so that the air may be warmed by its passage through the nose ere it reaches the lungs.

Never stand still in cold weather, especially after having taken a slight degree of exercise; and always avoid standing upon ice or snow, or where the person is exposed to a cold wind.—Albany Argus.

Laughter as Medicine.—There is not the remotest corner or little inlet of the human body that does not feel some wavelet from the convulsion occasioned by good, hearty laughter. The life principle of the man is shaken to the innermost depths, sending new tidings of life and strength to the surface, thus materially tending to insure good health to the person who indulges therein. The blood moves more rapidly and conveys a different impression to all the organs of the body, as it visits them on that particular mystic journey when the man is laughing, from what it does at other times. For this reason every good, hearty laugh in which a person indulges lengthens his life, conveying, as it does, new and distinct stimulus to the vital forces. Doubtless the time will come when physicians, conceding more importance than they now do to the influence of the mind upon the vital forces of the body will make up their prescriptions more with reference to the minds and less to drugs for them; and will, in so doing, find the best and most effective method of producing the required effect upon the patient.—Baptist Weekly.

Importance of a Clean Skin.—Most of our invalids are such, and millions of more healthy people will become invalids, for the want of paying the most ordinary attention to the requirements of the skin. The membrane is too often regarded as a covering only instead of a complicated piece of machinery, scarcely second in its texture and sensitiveness to the ear and eye. Many treat it with as little reference to its proper functions as if it were nothing better than a bag for their bones. It is this inconsideration for the skin that is the cause of a very large proportion of the disease of the world. If, as claimed by some scientists, four-fifths, in the bulk, of all we eat and drink, must either pass off through the skin or be turned back upon the system as a poison, and that life depends as much upon these exhalations as upon breathing through the lungs, it must be of the most vital importance to keep the channel free.

For Husbands.—Don't think when you have won a wife you have won a slave.

Don't think that your wife has less feeling than your sweetheart. Her relation to you is changed, not her nature.

Don't think that you can dispense with all the little civilities of life toward her on marrying. She appreciates these things quite as much as other women.

Don't be gruff and rude at home. Had you been that sort of a fellow before marriage, the probabilities are that you would be sewing on your own buttons still.

Don't make your wife feel that she is an incumbrance on you by giving her grudgingly. Give her what she needs as cheerfully as though it were a pleasure so to do. She will feel better, and so will you.

Don't meddle in the affairs of the house under her charge. You have no more right to be poking your nose into the kitchen than she has to walk into your place of business and give directions to your employes.

Don't find fault with her extravagance in ribbons, etc., until you have shut down on cigars, tobacco, beer, etc.

Don't leave your wife at home to nurse the children on the score of economy, while you bolt down town at night; to see the show, or spend a dollar on billiards.

Don't bolt your supper, and hurry off to spend your evenings lounging around away from your wife. Before marriage you could'nt spend evenings enough with her.

Don't prowl in the loafing resorts till midnight, wasting your time in culpable idleness, leaving your wife lonely at home to brood over your neglect and her disappointment.

Don't think that board and clothes are sufficient for all a wife does for you.—Selected.

To be Solved.—Again are the puzzlers favored with something pertaining to geography. In No. 588 is given information worth remembering. Bertha takes a long word for the basis of her Enigma, "A state of preeminence" it may be to some. It depends altogether upon the constitution of one's mind. Even when the answer to Ed.'s Decapitation is published its meaning may not be plain at once. But think a little while, and immediately it is clear. The poem Maria H. names in her Cross-Word is touching and sweet though not grand and passionate. The Diamond following is up to the average. The last two puzzles are very fair. First-rate Charades and Deletions are never easy to make.

Lorne, Jerusalem.—All your solutions of the 14th Feb. are correct. By this time you have seen the acknowledgment of the receipt of your puzzle.

Fanny F. Crosby, Tusket, N. S.—We certainly excused the conceit, since it was very natural. To our idea a whole name looks well when printed. We thank you for your puzzles. Your answers are right. You are welcome always.

William A. Swim, Cape Island, N. S.—Two of your letters are received. One is dated over two months ago, containing solutions for Dec. 27. All are accurately answered, and your name is placed on the Roll. The second is written last month. Next to the teachings of experience, what you learn in school,—and school life is also part of experience,—is better than even our Puzzle Department. We know you never neglect school duties for puzzle solving, however much you like the latter. With one exception all your answers of the last January issue are right. All of the weeks previous are correct. Twice, then, is your name added to the Roll.

H., Lewiston, Me.—Your letter has been forwarded from Preston, and we were much pleased to receive it. The greater part of your solutions are right. Those features of geography you may think "obscure" another may not. What is obscure, also, should be brought to light. We are always happy to have you contribute.

John A. Cunningham, Cape Island, N. S.—All your solutions are given correctly. See the Roll of Honor. Your not being discouraged when the letters you send do not reach the Department is the germ of a quality all should cultivate.

X. Fitzwilliam, Johnston.—Your second annual instalment is to hand. Last year's is not yet exhausted; but the present favors you remit are none the less welcome. Thanks are returned for your kind opinion of the Intelligencer.

Mic-Mac, Fredericton.—Your solutions are all right. They come very quickly. You can not have two prizes. So the second is awarded our Jerusalem contributor, whose promptness and accuracy come next. See the R. of H.

A. M., Jerusalem.—All your answers for the 14th ult. are right. The second prize, we know, will please you. Your solutions of Dec. 26th are right. In your lists for the two weeks following, one wrong each. Both your lists for the two weeks prior to Feb. 14th are right. Thrice your name merits a place on the Roll.

Hope, Woodstock.—We can appreciate your great desire to win one of the prizes. But you are too late. Your name is on the Roll of Honor, however.

Accepted.—A. M.'s first-rate instalment of numerous puzzles. X. Fitzwilliam's "batch" of first-class contributions. The excellent Charade by H. The Charade, Blank Square, and Biblical Query from William A. Swim. And last of all and puzzling as any the very good puzzles from Fanny F. Crosby.

Notes and Queries.

Ella F. Stanton, St. John, sends the best answer to "Query No. 1—What kind of a bird is the Do-do? And of what place is it a native?" as follows:

It is a genus of large birds. Scientists and ornithologists suppose the genus is extinct. Many doubt its ever existing. It is said to have inhabited Madagascar and other parts of the East.

Notice.—Hereafter four weeks will be allowed between publishing a query and printing its answer.

NEW RICH BLOOD!

PARKS' COTTON YARNS!

AWARDED THE ONLY MEDAL GIVEN AT THE CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION

For Cotton Yarns of Canadian Manufacture.

Nos. 5's to 10's.

White, Blue, Red, Orange and Green.

Made of good American Cotton with great care, Correctly numbered and Warranted Full Length and Weight.

WE would ask the purchasers of Cotton Warp to remember that our Yarn is spun on Throstle Frames, which make a stronger yarn than the Ring Frames, used in making American yarn.

It is also better twisted and more carefully reeled; each hank being tied up in 7 leas of 120 yards each. This makes it much more easy to wind than when it is put up without leas—as the American is—and also saves a great deal of waste.

Those acquainted with weaving will understand the great advantage it is to them to use yarn put up in this manner.

COTTON CARPET WARP,

Made of No. 10 Yarn, 4-Ply. Twisted.

White, Red, Brown, Slate, &c.

All fast colors.

Each 5 lb. bundle contains 10,000 yards in length and will make a length of Carpet in proportion to the number of ends in width.

We have put more twist into this warp than it formerly had, and it will now make a more durable Carpet than can be made with any other material. Since its introduction by us, a few years ago, it has come into very general use throughout the country.

All our goods have our name and address upon them. None other are genuine.
