MARRIANNE FARNINNGHAM. There is a gentle stranger drawing nigh to eve dwelling, We cannot hear his footsteps fall so softly on the snow, And yet as He comes nearer,

And His smile shines out the clearer, 'Tis no more the face of stranger, but a Friend whom well we know. He came at first an infant, and His rest was in the manger; For the inn was full of pilgrims on that wondrous Christmas night.

But He stayed for love and duty, And to fill the world with beauty, Bringing perfect joy for sorrow, turning darkness into light. How He loved the hearts He sought for is not told by bells or carols, But in more pathetic pictures of the garden and the Cross; Yet He came to bring us pleasures, And to make us rich with treasures, And He did not shrink from sorrow, or from pov erty or loss. Once it seemed that He was leaving, but He said as he was passing "Lo, I am with you always!" and we know He comes to-day, With His kind hands, full of blessing Little children still caressing.

And dispensing gifts of bounty unto all about His Christmas Eve." Very near He is to some who have longed for His appearing; And they seem to hold communion with the Master whom they love. You can see their glad eyes glisten As to His dear voice they listen,

And the earthly homes are brightened with the joy of Heaven above. But He turns to some with yearning, but they do not care to know Him,

Though their hearts are faint with sorrow, and their eyes with tears are dim. He would chase away their sadness, Till they sang for very gladness,

But they will not let Him heal them, they can find no room for Him. Oh, the Lord is very patient, very tender and for-

Let us give Him reverent welcome, let us worship Him in song; Let us tell again the story

Of His birth, and life, and glory, And pray that all the weary world may know His rest ere long.

He laughed again when he saw he was discovered, and the corners of his mouth went down instead of up, for the old gentleman made a snatch at the salloon string, and glared at it so fiercely, with his spectacles askew, that I felt sure he meant to throw he saucy thing out of the window.
